GOODBYE AND GOOD LUCK

As long as the pretty hamlet of Estacada has her foresight on the county seat we predict the abject failure of any plan for the creation of Cascade county by the secession of the eastern part of Clackamas county.

Estacada was in too big a hurry to build a fine court house and bobbled the latest deal for secession by not drawing its lines straight and by not considering the fact that several growing communities do not yet see that a court house and seat of government at Estacada would be of any more value to them than the one at Oregon City. They can hardly realize that they would be directly benefitted by having a county seat which to reach they must travel mountain trails and muddy byways, or go through Oregon City to Portland and thence to Estacada on the P. R. L. & P. cars.

The fact is, briefly, that Estacada wants to be the whole show and the other communities can't see such ambitions for the dust that they stir up.

But if Estacada had not been so anxious and had prepared sensibly for the division of the county, forgetting her own glory and profit for the general welfare of the new county, the Courier would have a front page shout of joy and would utter a loud and hearty "goodbye and good luck." We feel, honestly, that the proper division of Clackamas county would be to the mutual advantage of the eastern and western sections, but that depends altogether upon where the line of division is drawn and the location of the county seat.

The western half of the county would not assume a joyful air at losing so many good citizens, but it would be riding itself of half its territory and would lose only about one fifth of its assessed valuation. Thereafter four fifths of the income could be devoted to the upbuilding of one half the territory. Which would not be half bad!

Estacada's hopeful dreamers did not stop to draw straight lines. Therein is sufficient reason to believe their ambitions will fail. The map of Cascade county includes Clackamas county's heaviest taxpaying property in that vicinity, the P. R. L. & P. Co.'s Casadero and Bull Run plants and lines, but it leaves out Sandy and Boring and a narrow strip of contiguous territory along the north end of the county. The map leaves Clackamas county in the approximate shape of an inverted "L," if the reader can extend his imagination a bit.

Clackamas county would profit by having only half as much territory to manage with one-fifth less money and Cascade county would profit by managing its large territory itself. We dare say the result would not be so beneficial to Cascade as to Clackamas county, inasmuch as the funds of the more thinly settled eastern half would not be sufficient to build the class of roads and make the other improvements that have been paid for by Clackamas county.

Estacada has thwarted her own ambitions, too, in attempting to take all the glory, in addition to the county seat. There is no means of communication between the southern and northern sections of the eastern half of Clackamas county and Estacada, therefore, is not a logical or desirable county seat town.

If Estacada has any real desire, other than to secure a court house, to see the county divided she will agree to put the dividing line a few miles further east and draw it straight, and she may then be able to induce the worthy citizens of Sandy, Boring and other places to co-operate in her plans.

To take these places from Clackamas county would be like the parting of very dear friends, like the disruption of the little party about the family hearthstone, but it might all be for the ultimate good—and in the end the "ultimate good" is what we all should strive to bring about.

While we do not count Estacada's secessionists, and while we would as much regret to see Sandy and Boring taken away as if it were only Estacada which might leave, the Courier believes that a revision of plans for the division, taking almost an equal half of Clackamas county, separated by a straight line from Multnomah county to Marion county, would result in a very general approval of the scheme; providing, of course, that such tributary territories as Highland, Colton, Viola and Logan be left to Clackamas county absolutely.

THE INFLUENCE OF FEAR

The idea that the horrors and shocks of fighting must give rise to considerable unbalancing of mind among those who are so constantly exposed has now been pronounced incorrect in a discussion by German military surgeons, who have had opportunity for making large observations on this subject. While fear may produce various mental disturbances, the normal brain is said to be quite resistant to the severe emotional impacts inflicted upon it during the savage conflicts to which the soldiers are daily subjected.

Professor Wilmans of Heidelberg and Professor E. Meyer of Konigsberg regard the occurrence of mental diseases on the firing line as chiefly due to pre-existing conditions which have escaped attention. The former expresses the astounding belief that sufferers from nervous troubles due to warfare are more fit for service at the front than they would be at home, and he advises that they be sent to a base hospital, from which they can easily be sent back to the ranks or be transferred to the handling of munitions. Sending the men home he regards as placating the disease and retarding recovery.

Professor Meyer ascertained that of his 2,561 cases of mental and various disturbances occurring on the firing line the majority had existed prior to their service at the front, and in only rare instances did wounds, injuries or illness of any kind appear to be the cause. When manifestations were similar to those found in civil life Professor Meyer did not discharge the men from military service. So firmly convinced is he of the correctness of this view that he concludes that there is no such disease entity as a military or war psychosis (disease of the mind), and that persons affected with these symptoms, caused by fear, are more apt to recover at the front than at home.

LET US FORGET

"A feature of the election upon which Portland can be congratulated (and the same influence has been and is still being felt in Clackamas county and other parts of Oregon) is the decline of organized church and anti-church influence as a factor," says the Oregon Voter. It is to be hoped that the different secret cabals which used religious prejudice or church affiliation as a means of securing support for or opposing candidates will cease their bitter activities in this splendid American city. Some lessons have been learned that should not be forgotten. One is that no office-holder can with impunity favor members of his own denomination in appointments. The other is that enlightened people will not long permit themselves to be delivered in thousand lots by scheming politicians under the guise of fighting a church. It is obnoxious to American ideals that religion should be mixed with politics. No questions should be asked as to a man's religion. That is a matter of conscience, and no man should be punished or rewarded because of his religious belief or affiliation.

Unquestionably the thousands who voted in a group for one list of candidates last spring were inspired by sincere motives. Seemingly a large portion of those thousands awoke to the fact that they had been used by adroit political manipulators. A careful analysis of the general election returns fails to reveal that the offensive and defensive religio-political forces did more than balance each other, for the outcome on all candidates where religion was at all an issue seems to have been decided by other considerations.

THE RABBIT HAT

Unless Congressman Sinott gets a greater hustle on him in interesting eastern manufacturers, the jackrabbit hat is destined to extinction rather than the distinction of crowning the flowing locks of other dignitaries than himself. According to a county agent report on file at the Oregon Agricultural college, 67,000 of the long-eared speeders were killed in Crook county last year by the poison route alone. With the organizations now perfected over eastern Oregon by O. A. C. underestimates, next year's harvest of jackrabbits should total 67,000 or even reach 670,000,000, if there are that many there and the poison holds out. In Malheur county, "700 rabbits were found dead where four ounces of strychnine had been distributed the day before." Thus it will be seen that the reign of the jackrabbit and the possibility of fur hats for all of us is becoming rapidly doubtful.—Farmers' Week News.

HE KNEW THE TURK.

So He Boldly Proceeded to Take the Law Into His Own Hands.

In his book, "Forty Years in Constantinople," Sir Edwin Pears tells the following story to illustrate the Turk's attitude toward foreigners:

I knew the Englishman of whom the story was told, and I persuaded him one day to give me his own version. He sued a man in the chief Turkish court that has jurisdiction over cases between Europeans and Turkish subjects. When the Turkish defendant came to tell his tale he spoke of the Englishman as a glauco, or infidel. The Englishman objected. Although the judges knew perfectly well that it is contrary to Turkish law to use such an epithet, they did not interfere, whereupon the Englishman said, "If you call me a glauco again I shall take the law into my own hands."

The Turk at once replied, "Well, you are a glauco!" The Englishman stepped across the floor three or four paces and gave the Turk a blow on the nose that startled him and the court. As the blood flowed freely, there was a great hubbub, and orders were given to arrest the Englishman. He was a big, powerful fellow, and instantly he smashed the stool on which he was seated and cried out that he would brain the first man who laid hands upon him.

Ailschan, the dragoman who first told me the story, said that every one hesitated to attack the Englishman, and he, Ailschan, was asked by the president to tell the aggressor that if he would apologize there would be an end of the matter.

"Apologize?" said the Englishman. "Not a bit of it. He insulted me, and I let him have it."

Ailschan went back to the president and said, "This is the kind of an Englishman who won't stand an insult, and I can do nothing with him." Thereupon the court ordered the proceedings to go on as if nothing had happened.

A Rousing Welcome.

"Anyhow," said the small man with the big set of books, over which he figured from early morn till late at night, "anyhow, there is one faithful friend at home that never fails to give me a rousing welcome."

"What friend is that?" asked the billing clerk, pausing to eat a sandwich while the boss wasn't looking. "My old alarm clock," replied the small man dreamily.—Jacksonville Times-Union.

Fishermen Meet

A campaign to bring about the opening of the Willamette to net fishermen as far as the former dead line, 600 feet below the falls, will probably be waged by the Clackamas County Fishermen's union, it was decided at a meeting of that organization Friday night. Proposed legislative matters were discussed and the union went on record as strongly opposed to any attempt to close the Willamette and other streams to commercial fishing, and they will fight a proposed bill to close streams to traps, wheels and seines.

NEW ERA FARMER KILLED

Blast Explosion Takes Life of John Swint, Young Russian

The lifeless body of John Swint, a New Era farmer, was found in a field on his farm late last Thursday, 100 feet from the spot where the man had set a blast to explode a stump. Mr. Swint failed to come to the house at the usual supper hour and the family searched for him. They found him 100 feet away from the blast that killed him, according to Coroner W. E. Hempstead.

Mr. Swint was 31 years of age and was a native of Russia. He had been farming at New Era for a year, and had lived in America practically all his life. He is survived by Mrs.

Swint and six children, and his father, three brothers and six sisters. Mr. Swint was buried from the Canby Methodist church on Sunday.

Frost and Multnomah county officials were in the vicinity of Grays Crossing Monday. The indiscriminate sale of tobacco to boys of any age has been watched by Mr. Frost for several weeks and it is probable that dealers in this county will be involved.
