AN OPEN RIVER

To the man up a tree there does not appear a very weighty reason why the Willamette river should be closed up to an industry that brings into Oregon City approximately $30,000 annually. It would not appear to be common business sense to force such an industry out, but certain shortsighted sportsmen would accomplish that very thing by forcing the net fishermen to move their dead line farther away from the falls.

All opinions seem to concur in the fact that there are thousands upon thousands of fish in the Willamette each year that the net men and the anglers do not get. They are injured and bruised on the ladder and at the falls until scores of them die and float on the property along the banks each year. Why should not the net men get as many of these fish as they can? The fish will apparently die in far greater numbers than at present if the net men are barred from the river.

Given proper ladder facilities, there might be some sort of argument against opening the river—or keeping it open, but in the absence of such facilities the net men, with their increasingly important industry and investment in the community, should be allowed full privileges.

Property owners along the lower river have a just complaint against any plan that would only result in the death and deterioration of greater numbers of fish. In many cases property is unfit for sale or use because it is little less than a decomposing ground for salmon. Property values are less as a result.

The anglers and sportsmen—and it is a fact that very few local people profit from their sport or take part in it—could catch enough fish to prevent waste, or even if the fish could live in the water there might still be an argument against opening the river. The anglers, if they persist in working for a closed river, are merely serving selfish motives, because closing the river will not mean that the anglers can get more fish—it will only mean that those now caught in the nets will die and the fishing industry with them.

THE PRESIDENT'S NOTE

The appeal which the president has sent to all the belligerent nations opens the way to negotiations.

He urges them to state in definite terms the conditions which they regard as necessary to an enduring peace. The request is reasonable and cannot be refused.

It would be a reflection on the nations at war to doubt that they themselves clearly understood just what it is that they are fighting for, or to assume that they are seeking advantages which they are unwilling to avow.

Since, therefore, they know what they are fighting for and have no secret reasons for continuing the war they will welcome the opportunity which the president affords them to present their respective sides.

While both sides will probably ask for more than they expect to secure, they will recognize that from now on the responsibility for a continuance of the war will rest upon the side that makes unreasonable demands.

All the rulers have denied responsibility for the beginning of the war and they cannot fail to understand that responsibility for continuing the conflict is still more grave, because the war is more cruel and costly than anyone could have imagined beforehand.

All the other neutral nations will be glad to support the president's efforts out of consideration for their own welfare as well as for humanitarian reasons.

The peace conference when it assembles will furnish the representatives of Christianity an opportunity to offer the philosophy of Christ in the place of the philosophy of Pilate, the philosophy which is responsible for the present war.

The nations of the world have built their hope of peace on their ability to excite fear. They have tried to terrorize each other into peace. They have allowed militarists to set up false standards of honor and to give a threatening tone to their diplomacy. The time is ripe for the substitution of love for hatred, and the spirit of co-operation for the spirit of combat. It has been popular to argue that justice must come before love. That is not the order in Christ's teachings. "Love your enemies," was the law he proclaimed. Love comes first and brings justice with it.—W. J. Bryan.

IT CAN'T BE DONE

So says the Eugene Register in commenting upon the startling conclusion reached by the Sacramento, Cal., Bee. The conclusion is that unless the saloon in California decides to reform itself from the inside the people of the state will soon reform it from the outside with an ax. The Bee is so pleased with this conclusion that it is scattering it broadcast to the press in the form of a circular that is liberally sprinkled with paragraphs in black type. One of these paragraphs reads:

"Prohibition is marching along to increased victories. And the fault is solely with the liquor trade itself. And while that is so, that trade has not the intelligence to recognize its own guilt, nor the perceptiveness to understand that, if it does not reform, and reform drastically, it will not only drive itself out of business, but will foist upon the state of California the injustice and the menace of prohibition."

It is to be suspected that the Bee has been delving in an amateur way into archaeology and in its investigations among the dusty records of past centuries has come across one of the first assertions that the saloon must either reform itself or be abolished. With the zeal of an amateur, it hastens to make its find public so that it may gain honor from advancing a new idea. Surely this must be the case, or it would not use up so much good black type in rehashing so old an issue.

In every state where the sale of liquor is forbidden the adoption of prohibition laws has been preceded by a campaign to reform the saloon from within. Liquor dealers have been warned with a tremendous solemnity that unless they turned aside from the error of their ways and made of the saloon a place where father and mother and the children could gather and spend a pleasant and harmless evening their business would be done away with, and city after city has passed model license laws. But all to no purpose. The saloon has refused to reform itself, and as a result an outraged public has stepped in and reformed it with a club.

The "wet" interests of California would as well save their breath. It is useless for them to shout to the saloon-keeper that he must reform his business, for he will not do it. Indeed, the experience of the United States with the liquor business leads pretty definitely to the conclusion that the saloon cannot be reformed from within—that it is a business that to be conducted at all must be conducted upon a basis of lawlessness and depravity. If there is such a thing as a model saloon, it has never been discovered in sufficient numbers to make any great impression on the public.

California's experience will be no different from that of other states. The saloonkeeper will be told that he must reform, but will not reform. He will go right on conducting his place of business along the same lines it has always been conducted along and sooner or later the people will rise up in disgust and take the business of reform into their own hands.

THE FARMER'S WIFE

The department of agriculture, working with many of the state colleges, has been making real progress in its work of lightening the work of farm women. The work is there to be done just the same, but the girls and women are being helped to do it in more efficient and less back-breaking ways. There has grown up a four-year course in housekeeping and outdoor activities. Cultivation of a garden and canning of products, poultry-raising, bread-making, general cooking, sewing and care of the home are among the things taught in this vocational course, says The Dallas Chronicle.

Many co-operative enterprises have been organized and pushed to success. One, the "egg circle," is particularly worth while and interesting. These egg circles are composed of groups of women who "get together" in the marketing of eggs produced in too small quantities to be profitable when marketed by each individual producer. Home economic clubs have been formed. Another novel feature is the "automobile home-makers' excursion." On these excursions a good-sized group of farmers and their wives visit neighboring territory, stopping to examine farm and home equipment, methods and results.

This extension work has been going on for some time in the south and for a shorter time in north and west. All over the country marked progress has been made and success has attended most of the work. One chief aim is, of course, to have less and less of the work done by "outsiders." The promoters of the idea realize that for permanent value it must come as a growth within the farm communities themselves. Everyone who knows anything of the difficulties of farm life can be glad that this general movement is working out so well.

BILLY SUNDAY, PREACHER

"The noisiest man I ever heard. He is a monkey wrench thrown into the machinery of the social revolution that is surely coming," said Helen Keller, noted blind and former deaf woman, after she had heard Billy Sunday in one of his thousand dollar tirades. "He is doing a lot of good," Miss Keller remarked, "but not in the way he thinks he is."

"He is preaching an old faith, but he has not heard from God in a long time!"

That's just what's wrong with a good many preachers today. They haven't heard from God in such a long time that they have taken to preaching their own Christianity—their own doctrines which the Redeemer was sent to present.

IN DEWEY'S MEMORY

Congregational Service is Touching Messages from Great Men

A beautiful tribute of respect and whole-hearted love was given to the late Admiral George Dewey at the Congregational church on Sunday evening before a large audience. With messages from prominent men in national life the Rev. J. W. MacCallum brought to his congregation one of the most fitting memorials that has been heard in many years, and, indeed, brought tears to the eyes of many whose patriotism inspired their sorrow at the death of the hero of Manila bay.

One of the most touching tokens of esteem for the great admiral was the message received by the Rev. Mr. MacCallum from Governor Horace F. Graham, of Vermont, the native state of Admiral Dewey. Governor Graham said:

"It was the privilege of Vermont to give Admiral Dewey to the nation. The country is saddened by the passing of this heroic figure, but even while she mourns, Vermont finds solace in the thought that the inspiration of his noble career will be transmitted as a rich heritage to the nation's latest posterity."

"The mystery and magic of the sea were not an influence in Dewey's early life. The great commander was born in the shadow of the eternal hills in that type of country that has ever produced a sturdy and freedom-loving citizenry, and as a youth he brought to the service of his country those manly qualities which, many years later, when the man and opportunity were joined in a brief and brilliant action in the distant seas, enabled him to establish himself as the foremost naval commander of his generation, and to reveal himself worthy of the finest traditions of the American navy."

"It is fitting that there should be a union of Oregon and Vermont in a service to the memory of the great admiral. It was an Oregon regiment that marched into the plaza at Manila when the completion of Dewey's victory was signalled by the lowering of the Spanish colors and the raising of the American standard in their place, and it was a Vermonter, Captain Clark, who sailed the gallant Oregon on that memorable voyage through the dangerous seas and placed her in action at Santiago with lasting renown to himself and his ship."

"Admiral Dewey richly earned the love of a grateful people and the enduring fame which is his. As long as the memory of his acts shall serve as a stimulus to the coming generations, so long may we face the future without fear. It is the devout wish of Vermont that the time may never come when she will fail to give a Dewey to the nation in its hour of trial."

What an inspiring message! It is, as the Rev. MacCallum said of Dewey: "Dreaming only of his country's greatness, greatness dropped its mantle over him."

W. J. WILSON & CO., Oregon City Agent

A message of sincere respect and sorrow was received from President Wilson. It embodied much the same sentiment as the statement given to the press upon the death of Dewey. A letter from Rear Admiral Eustace B. Rogers of Tacoma, given in full elsewhere in the Courier, and a message from Governor James Withycombe were also read at the service Sunday. Governor Withycombe said in part:

"It gives me very sincere pleasure to offer a word of appropriate recognition for the great service of Admiral Dewey to the nation. It is fitting indeed that honor be paid his memory, and I am glad to add my small share to any services designed to commemorate this stalwart American."

A special church committee, comprising F. A. Miles, Frank Frige and E. W. Scott, submitted resolutions of condolence at the service.

MOTHERHOOD WOMAN'S JOY

Suggestions to Childless Women.

Among the virtues of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the ability to correct sterility in the cases of many women. This fact is well established as evidenced by the following letter and hundreds of others we have published in these columns.

Poplar Bluff, Mo.—"I want other women to know what a blessing Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been to me. We had always wanted a baby in our home but I was in poor health and not able to do my work. My mother and husband both urged me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, my health improved and I am now the mother of a fine baby girl and do all my own house work."—Mrs. ALLIE B. TIMMONS, 216 Almond St., Poplar Bluff, Mo.

In many other homes, once childless, there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice—it will be confidential and helpful.

Mrs. Marian Miller

Mrs. Marian Wallace Miller, 69 years old, died at her home here Friday evening after an extended illness. Mrs. Miller was the wife of Thomas M. Miller, who has been circuit court bailiff here for 47 years and lived at 602 Center street, where she had been confined for the past year. She had been in ill health for nearly 10 years.

As Marian Allen, Mrs. Miller crossed the plains with her parents in 1850 and settled in Canemah. Her parents were Dr. and Mrs. William R. Allen. Dr. Allen died less than a year after he arrived here. Marian Allen married William Barlow and two children from this union survive, Mary Barlow Wilkins of Portland, and C. U. Barlow of California. On December 31, 1863, Mrs. Barlow married Thomas Miller, and from this union Mrs. C. G. Huntley and Ralph D. Miller survive. The late Mrs. Joseph Hedges, Mrs. W. C. Ganong and Mrs. C. Miller were half-sisters and half-brothers of the deceased.

Mrs. Miller was buried in Mountain View on Sunday afternoon. Services were held at St. Paul's Episcopal church with the Rev. J. F. Prichard of Montana officiating. Judge J. U. Campbell, Judge Grant B. Dimick, Joseph E. Hedges, Gilbert L. Hedges, R. C. Ganong and R. D. Wilson were pallbearers.

GRANGE WANTS SERVICE

Oppose Dropping Extension Dept. of State Superintendent's Office

The Milwaukie grange, in meeting on Saturday, passed resolutions opposing the idea of dropping the extension service as a part of the work of the state superintendent of public instruction and asking the legislature to make adequate provision for the service. The resolution passed is as follows:

"Resolved that we, the members of the Milwaukie Grange, No. 268, in regular session assembled this 20th day of January, 1917, believing it to be for the best interest of the state, do respectfully request the honorable legislature of the state of Oregon to make adequate provision for the maintenance of the industrial field work which has been carried on for several years past through the office of the superintendent of public instruction."

FIRE VICTIM BURIED HERE

Taylor Washburn Interred in Mountain View Lost Life in Fire

Taylor Washburn, Eugene farmer and formerly a resident of Clackamas county, one of the three men who lost their lives in the fire of the New Ross house at Portland on Saturday, was buried with simple ceremonies at Mountain View cemetery on Sunday afternoon. Washburn was en route from his home at Eugene to Kelso, Wash., and stopped off at Portland, registering at the Ross house. The fire caught him there because he did not step through an open window to the fire escape. Instead, when he was awakened by the landlady he became confused, ran into the hall and plunged into the flames that practically consumed the building.

The Washburn funeral was simple and the dead man's wife led a prayer at the graveside. A few of his immediate friends attended the ceremonies at one o'clock Sunday.

Insure Against Scale by Spraying

SAN JOSE SCALE is a factor that nearly every orchardist, farmer and fruit grower has got to reckon with. As a progressive grower you must fight the scale until you have it under control, for when it has once infested the trees in your orchard, if left alone, it will never let up until it has killed every tree. The one sure way to control the scale is to spray while your trees are dormant with some effective material.

Lime-Sulphur Solution

can be used successfully as a spray for fungus disease and for sucking insects. It mixes readily with Arsenate of Lead and in this shape is especially effective as a combination insecticide and fungicide spray.

If you have any scale in your orchard or any fungus troubles, come in and tell us and we will give you all necessary information.

Prices of Lime-Sulphur Solution

$9.50 per barrel ($1 returned for barrel)
1.25 per five gallon can (container free)
.25 per gallon (container extra)

We also have the agency for SHERWIN-WILLIAMS DRY LIME-SULPHUR. It is not a substitute for Liquid Lime-Sulphur, but is exactly the same thing with the water evaporated; it is drawn from the same tank.

We offer S-W DRY LIQUID LIME-SULPHUR to orchardists as being more economical than the liquid, and more efficient.

Ask us to tell you why.
