CHARGE BIG DEALERS

Salem Meeting Says Portland Creameries Control Market

Charging that the big Portland creameries, through the Portland Produce exchange, control the butter market, manipulate prices to suit themselves and make the law of supply and demand a secondary matter, representatives of 15 creameries from all over Oregon met at Salem last week to take the first steps toward forming an organization to enable them to compete with Portland concerns.

"Under present conditions we are absolutely helpless," declared A. Slaughter, manager of the Capital City Co-operative creamery of Salem. "The market quotations sent us are purely arbitrary, and when the Portland concerns want to they can make us pay as much for butterfat as we can charge for our best prints."

Dairy and Food Commissioner Mickle addressed the meeting and urged the organization of country creameries. If such action is not taken, he said, the Portland creameries may put the country concerns out of business within two years.

A committee of three, consisting of O. B. Simpson of the Agricultural college dairy department, H. G. Faust of the Alsea Creamery company and R. C. Vohn Lee of Philomath, was named to draw up a constitution and effect a permanent organization.

Another committee, consisting of L. D. Nash of the Nashville creamery, A. Slaughter of the Capital City creamery of this city and P. O. Powell of the La Grande creamery of Monmouth, was named to confer with creameries and other qualified interests in Portland concerning price regulation. It is the purpose of this committee to establish a permanent ratio between the price of butterfat and that of cube butter as a basis for the standardization of prices.

By unanimous vote of the creamerymen present it was decided to appoint a committee of three to be known as the legislative committee. It will be the duty of this committee to camp in the capital and fight all attempts to consolidate the office of dairy commissioner with any other office. The creamerymen have several matters of proposed legislation of vital importance to themselves which the organization expects to place before the present session of the legislature.

NEW PLANS FOR Y. P. I.

Constitution Provides Management by Laymen and Contributors

Providing for the management of the proposed Young People's institute by a board of lay governors selected from all Christian churches, regardless of denomination, and for the election of three members of this board by the contributors or stockholders, a new constitution was tentatively approved at a meeting of the temporary officers Tuesday night. One member of the board will be elected by each church. A committee to make a further investigation into the possibility of increasing the scope of the organization and to draft articles of incorporation was appointed, including C. H. Dye, John W. Loder and C. Schuebel. A second committee, whose object will be to enlist the interest of other churches in this new plan comprises P. D. Forbes, F. W. King and T. L. Charman.

Pastors of several churches attended the meeting Tuesday night and expressed approval of the plan, but before it is finally adopted an effort will be made to secure the undivided support of all denominations. The committees appointed will report at a meeting set for next Monday night.

SCHOOL SHUT OFF

S. P. Fences Track Near Ardenwald. Judge Considers Matter

Twenty-one children, pupils at the Ardenwald school and residents of the Sellwood Gardens neighborhood have been kept out of school this week because the Southern Pacific company had built a wire fence along its right-of-way, preventing the children from crossing the tracks. County Judge H. S. Anderson on Tuesday prepared and forwarded to the Public Service commission a petition asking that the company be forced to make a crossing over its right-of-way.

The Sellwood Garden district is not situated that the children cannot travel on the county roads and they have beaten paths across country and over the tracks.

A TRIBUTE TO DEWEY

Rear Admiral Rogers Sends Intimate Letter to Memorial Service

Rear Admiral Eustace B. Rogers of Tacoma, a close friend of the late Admiral George Dewey, paid a tender and intimate tribute to his late fellow officer in the following letter sent to the Rev. J. W. MacCallum of the Congregational church, where a fine memorial service was held on Sunday evening. Admiral Rogers and the Rev. Mr. MacCallum are close personal friends, so that the officer's letter carries double interest.

My dear Mr. MacCallum:
I have your letter in which you ask me if I will send to your memorial service a message bearing upon the life of Admiral Dewey. It is a subject worthy to make me pause in the midst of a very busy life to bear my testimony to the value of a great naval officer whom I have known for nearly thirty years, and under whom I served in Manila bay from August, 1899, until he was relieved and returned to the United States in May, 1900.

He embodied in his life all that we think an American naval officer should embody therein: a strict disciplinarian, a highly trained and efficient officer, a man whose devotion to duty was almost a religion, whose mettle had been tried in two wars, and who had always shown himself to be what he proved to be in the summit of it all, in that great battle of the first of May. That his ships were superior to the Spanish fleet is beside the point. The laconic message from the government directed him to proceed to Manila and destroy the Spanish fleet. All the information he had was to the effect that the entrance and channel into Manila bay was planted with torpedoes. He did not know what shore batteries he would encounter, nor did he know the exact composition of the fleet of the enemy. He went past Corrigidor and its batteries at the entrance of Manila bay before dawn and found Admiral Montojo's fleet anchored in Cavite bay under the protection of the shore battery of six modern guns. It is an accepted canon, the truth of which has been many times proven, that ships, even armored ones, can rarely attack efficiently well protected, well manned shore batteries. But that did not daunt Admiral Dewey, and that battery more than counterbalanced the inferiority in ships and guns of the Spanish fleet, not one of which escaped after the battle. So Admiral Dewey deserves all the credit he ever received for his promptness, his daring and his success, which made this coast of ours and the Pacific ocean safe.

The story of his return to the United States is so well known that I will not dwell upon it. I had served with him previous to joining his command in the "Monterey" in August, 1898, and when the day after my arrival I made my call upon him I found him on the quarter deck of the "Olympia," then lying five miles from Manila. I congratulated him upon his great victory, remarked the enthusiastic reception that the "Monterey" had received in coming in from San Francisco the day before and said that I presumed that he was glad to have her, that so warm a reception would indicate it. He looked across the bay at the German fleet anchored opposite the city of Manila and said, "Yes, I am very glad to have the 'Monterey.' I have never known what those Germans were going to do and now I don't care what they do." For the "Monterey" with her heavy batteries gave him the added strength he required to meet any interference with the taking of the city, which followed a week afterwards.

In character Dewey was a man of very high spirit and at times high temper, but he had that fine accompaniment of temper in that its outbursts never carried with them any moodiness or evil memory. He was a good comrade, a loyal friend, a gallant man. His was a kindly and very generous temperament. As he grew older he mellowed, his spirit grew softer, and it was then that he was the most lovable and was beloved throughout the service.

His loss to the navy is a great one. He embodied all that was best in it, in character, training, personal appearance and personal bearing. He pre-eminently deserved those words that every American naval officer endeavors to merit: "He was an officer and a gentleman."

Yours very sincerely,
EUSTACE B. ROGERS,
Rear Admiral, U. S. N.

Peerless fence is made of open hearth steel wire, evenly drawn and heavily galvanized; when properly stretched will do effective service for a lifetime.

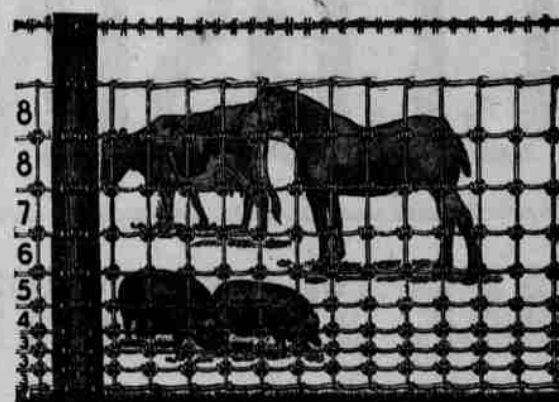

We do not guarantee these prices; they apply to our present stock only.

26-inch Hog Fence. A fence specially constructed to stand excessive strain. This fence is usually used with three strands of barb wire, which not only makes a durable hog fence, but a stock and field fence for all purposes.

The stiff stays of the Peerless fence make it superior for turning hogs, because they cannot root under it, or lift it up. When properly stretched will do effective service for a lifetime.

49-inch Field Fence. The stiff stays of this fence make it a practical fence for any purpose.

It is especially recommended for a line fence.

The long knot which holds the wires together will not kink or slip. The galvanizing on this fence is extra heavy.

Busch's Rainproof Roofing Ready For Use

Busch's Rainproof Roofing is made of high-grade wool-fibre felt, saturated with a gummy waterproof compound that will not dry or rot, and coated with a non-oxidizing weatherproof material, so combining the qualities necessary to secure a perfect protection against the elements at a minimum cost.

Not the same as other roofings. Busch's Roofing is guaranteed to be superior to any felt roofing produced by anyone. It will outwear tin, tar and gravel roofing, and is far superior to shingles, thatch or galvanized iron. It is lighter than any of the above materials and far cheaper than most of them.

Busch's Roofing is made to outwear other prepared roofings of similar weight because it is of heavy strong wool-fibre felt and waterproof gums and mineral 100 per cent pure. This roofing is strong and tough, elastic and pliable, and is satisfactory on steep roofs or flat roofs and buckles much less than any other brand of prepared roofing.

merely coming here, but is already here. "The prosperity we have here," he said, "is different in nature from that of the east, but it is just as positive. Our mineral industries are very prosperous. The increased wealth of the east has produced a crop of consumers who are paying good prices for the wheat, barley, fruit, vegetables and lumber that we have to offer. Never before has there been such a vast multitude of the people who are buyers of luxuries. The spending power of the east has helped us and is helping us, for we are the sellers and they are the buyers."

"I look forward to a continuance of the country's prosperity for some time to come, peace or no peace. The wave of prosperity that has resulted in part from improved domestic conditions and in part from the European war has gained too much momentum to be easily stopped, and even after the declaration of peace, its forward movement will proceed for a considerable length without interruption."
