

THE FASHIONS

New York, July 28, 1915.

Wash frocks are not what they used to be. Indeed, you have to rub your eyes and look twice to believe such altogether smart garments were ever intended to touch the water. The nets, the voiles, the Swisses, and even the linens, have that mysterious something called chic in their make-up that gives them entire wherever the one-piece silk dress may go.

Skirts Overlap Waists and Vice Versa

The treatment of the waistline is one of the most important features of the frocks that the big stores are showing us. Invariably, the skirt comes up and finishes with a heading at the girdle, or the waist extends into a peplum and covers the skirt. This overlapping of waist and skirt offers a welcome relief from more pronounced joinings and is in itself a trimming for the dress.

There are skirts with slightly raised waistlines and plain inch-and-a-half headings; others with wide girdles below the heading, and, again, the skirt is shirred or corded, with the heading extending above. The peplums, too, are treated in different ways. Many are made with the new normal waistlines, but there are still a few with the raised waistlines. Usually, with the peplum idea, the waist has a vest, leaving an open space in the peplum in front. At the waistline, there are double lines of shirring, a crushed girdle, a belt of the material, or one of the new fancy belts of patent leather and white kid.

The Popularity of Voile

It has been said, and with truth, that this is a voile season. As in silk, taffeta is the favored weave, so in wash materials voile predominates. The loose, cross-mesh lends itself readily to the quaint styles of the 1915 season. Whole windows of the large stores are given up to frocks of voile; the Avenue throngs with people who wear it, and the lesser stores on the side streets contribute their share to its popularity in exclusive models for a chosen few of New York's select society.

One model of unusual merit is a symphony in pink and white, standing on the spacious third floor of an Avenue store. The pink is a delicate salmon shade, printed in bars every fourth square. This material is used for the waist, cut surplus fashion, and for the skirt that comes up over the waist with a heading, while the collar and cuffs are white voile, edged with a pleating of the pink and white.

Pockets a Feature in Misses' Skirts
If misses' skirts are properly pocketed, they are smart this season. Indeed, pockets in their newly-found popularity have outgrown skirts and extend into straps on the belts and even into suspenders on the blouse. They are real pockets, conveniently placed squarely over the hip, that a girl can put her hands into and swagger down the street like her big brother—pockets that are big enough to hold the knickknacks of the handbag, and last, but not the least important, pretty enough in shape to trim the skirt.

They appear on the rough-and-ready skirt of linen, washable corduroy and cotton gabardine. There are some charming models in soft blue and rose linens, with suspender pockets; sports skirts of corduroy have pockets that button over the belt—big, roomy affairs—at the sides that will be the pride and joy of some girl's life.

Pipings for Linens

One of the smartest ways of finishing the linen skirts is with pipings. A store that makes a specialty of linen dresses is featuring a rose linen piped in white. The skirt is made with the large patch pockets at the side that extend into suspenders, on the waist. The skirt, suspenders, pockets and cuffs are of the rose linen, while the waist is white Swiss. The pocket is outlined with a piping of white that accentuates its shape and adds to the style.

Midsummer Hats of Satins

Satin hats are an innovation of the midseason. Large shapes are favored in these, and trimmings are unique and original. A broad-brimmed white satin has a flat bow inserted in slits in the front of the crown; a black satin has white velvet birds pasted flat on the crown, and still another white satin has a crown of wool made in four sections, each section embroidered in a different color. The last suggests the cap of the jockey set down on the top of a satin hat, with coloring even more brilliant.

Velvet Combines with Hemp and Chip

Velvet is one of the fads in summer hats. However, it is seldom used alone. This season, it combines with hemp and chip. One particularly attractive hat has a wide soft brim of white hemp, with the low, close-fitting crown of black velvet finished at the front with a swirl of black velvet. This is held at the center with a pin stuck through diagonally. The head of the pin is a flower cut out of a flat piece of wood and painted in color. And so it goes, each hat is a story in itself, absolutely different from its neighbor.

Oriental Parasols

Parasols are the one Oriental note in the fashions. While there are some long-handled, fluffy models shown, the Japanese parasol is by far the favorite. These are made of silk, cotton crepe and paper—blunt at the end with many ribs and flat when opened. They come in broad awning stripes, plain colors and flowered. The very latest is the "Garden of Eden." This is a curious affair with black ebony handle, white ivory ribs and a white crepe top printed in black to represent Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, with all the trees and animals present.

Tapestried Handbags

Gate-top handbags are still popular. Rare bits of tapestry are now used for the bottom with gorgeous tassels to finish them off. The rich tones of the material oddly contrast with the light dresses. There is one bag in charming Oriental effect, with peacock coloring of gold and purple combined with dark red. This is finished with a gold tassel and heavy gold cord at the top. Other bags have bracelets at the top in place of the cord; and, for those who do not care for the deep tones of the tapestry, there are beaded effects and silver mesh bags in the same gate-top style.

MOTHER OF SCHOOL GIRL

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Daughter's Health.

Plover, Iowa.—"From a small child my 13 year old daughter had female weakness. I spoke to three doctors about it and they did not help her any. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been of great benefit to me, so I decided to have her give it a trial. She has taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound according to directions on the bottle and she is cured of this trouble. She was all run down when she started taking the Compound and her periods did not come right. She was so poorly and weak that I often had to help her dress herself, but now she is regular and is growing strong and healthy."—Mrs. MARTIN HELVIG, Plover, Iowa.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

ried farm adviser. What the Grange needs is a guardian. This Grange wanted the farmers bonded for 50 to 100 years to the same bankers we are bonded to now and trying to free ourselves from.

This Grange admits bankers, doctors and lawyers who, when admitted to their councils, control the machinery of the Grange, and now they want some boy to ride around in a gasoline wheelbarrow and tell them how to raise more spuds when they are worth only 40c per sack now. This Grange needs a guardian.

Over in Illinois the farmers are blessed (?) with a horde of these farm experts who invaded their premises and shot their stock because they contracted the foot and mouth disease from serum sent out free by these experts. The farmers had to run them away with shot guns and a federal judge fined these farmers the big sum of two cents for doing it.

The farmers of Missouri got this expert fever and hired several county experts and began to ask them questions, but got no reply until it was too late to be of any use, so they investigated and found out that these experts are not allowed to give out information until it had been censored by the state agricultural college and also a federal expert from Washington D. C. It seems a great many of these experts are educated by the Rockefeller foundation fund and that our state agricultural colleges are receiving sums from the beef trust to teach us hayseeds how to raise cheaper beef for them to sell at 30 cents per pound. Now the Grange wants these experts to tell them that they need a guardian.

These farm experts told the farmers of Texas to raise less cotton and more diversified crops so they took the advice of these so-called experts and raised early potatoes for the St. Louis market and the dealers in St. Louis sent back to these farmers for $13.00 per car to pay freight.

Brother farmers, don't you know that the only agricultural experts are the men who have been in the business for several years in that locality? Too many farmers let the contract out for their thinking. They let a man dressed in a long coat and fine raiment do their religious thinking; they let a few lawyers do their political thinking, and now they want some agricultural school-kid to do their agricultural thinking for them. What they need is a guardian.

Before me now is a bulletin by W. H. Kerr, a son of the president of our O. A. C. at Corvallis. This bulletin is issued by the Department of Agriculture, Washington D. C., and says that the trouble with agriculture is in the distribution. Now could a county expert revise the stealing methods of boards of trade? Could they lower freight rates? Could they in any way put money in the pockets of the women and children who toil in our factories so they could buy our high priced farm produce? Could they lower taxes by adding another high salaried officer holder to our overburdened taxpayers?

You Grangers walk right up to the polls and vote and work for lawyers to make the laws governing agriculture, and they tell you what sized box to sell berries in and when you or the consumer see the box you will agree with me that you need a guardian. These so-called experts have been governing agriculture for 50 years and more by law and you Grangers work harder to keep your members from learning something about politics than at any other scheme in your catalog. What you Grangers need is a common-sense guardian.

OREGON BUILDING CENTER

Great Log Palace at Exposition is Meeting Place for Crowds

The Oregon building at the Panama Fair, is the center for much special activity these days. The United Artisans held their convention at the building and the Salem drill team, which won out in the big drill contest, created quite a furore. There was an all-day program and the Artisans were fed on the building's vast expanse of balcony. Then came the Panama-Pacific Historical Congress for a session at the theatre in this building.

Friday last one of the largest formal social functions of the Exposition was given in honor of the young women of the Oregon Agricultural College here serving in the domestic science demonstration kitchen and dining room, and in honor of the college and university young men here as guides. The invitation list included the highest exposition officials, officialdom at the various state buildings, the elite of the society of the Bay cities, and the sojourning friends of these young people. Hundreds of these came to do the young people honor and large numbers stayed to enjoy the dancing. The domestic science women were congratulated warmly on the success of their undertaking and the expressions came from the innermost depths, for the Oregon buildings dining room is the fad with the greatest of the great.

The band from the battleship Oregon furnished music for the occasion and as a most distinguished honor, the Oregon's $15,000 punch bowl and service was loaned. This splendid social function was the happy thought of Commissioner John F. Lokan, who desired to show to the world Oregon's appreciation of the young women of the state in their successful endeavor to dignify home service, and of the young men in preparing practically for usefulness. And other functions are to follow swiftly.

Today fifteen hundred gallons of loganberry juice will tell at least fifteen thousand people of a new nectar more glorious than that which Jupiter sips. There will be an all-day program. August 9th to 17th will be "All Oregon Week," each day a special day had probably with a function each night. The 17th is "Renson

Day" and this will be made one of the greatest days of the exposition, this being an exposition as well as an Oregon occasion.

Correspondent Thinks Educational Funds Are Somewhat Wasted

Editor Courier: The March number of the Oregon Teachers' Monthly contains an "Interesting Letter" sent by Mr. Rebec, of Eugene. I have heard some of the educators of Oregon talk. The only big thing I have heard was at a teachers' institute in Oregon City, when a teacher, Mr. Foster, president of Reed Institute, gave his address, the "Professional-Spirit." The only big thing that I have ever read in the O. T. M. or any other of the school papers was the "Interesting Letter." Why was the address of the "Professional-Spirit" big? Why is this "Interesting Letter" big?

Back of each is a personality with a vision; not the personality of a standardized machine, but the personality of a soul.

Mr. Rebec refers to the writer of the letter as "only a teacher in one of the comparatively small schools." "Only a teacher"—think of that! If this state had more "only a teacher" and fewer machine "educators" the children of this state might get a vision of life worth while; and the teachers the vision that a teacher is not a mummy until mummified into an "educator;" and that to play the part of being "only a teacher" is a mighty big part to play, and that a child, whether in the smallest country school, or in a school where big numbers cause people to think they have a school and that a teacher is a teacher because he has a job in a big building.

Not long since the State University Quartette was in Coos County in the towns. Those who heard them sing know that life for them is richer and better. Why should not the people in the country receive joy and inspiration from the U. of O. quartette? They can't have it, not enough people to pay the glue club to go into the country. Pay—there you have it. They are entitled to their pay, sure.

The money that is given to the "School Supervisors" would give every child in this state a chance to hear the University quartette at least once or twice a year, and with a first class reader as an extra member those days would be memory days that would make all the days richer in life and vision.

There is an appropriation from the public money to the U. of O. for the purpose of turning out doctors. From this money doctors are paid to teach these would-be doctors. Suppose a person wants medical advice—can he write to the medical college of the University and get it? If a person wants to take a correspondence course in nursing can it be had from the medical department of the state university? The Chautauqua course of nursing costs $65—it is something good. Why should the people of the state have to pay a large fee for a correspondence course in nursing when they are supporting a medical college that should put out the required lectures, published by the state? This is where an every day benefit from taxes would come in a more friendly feeling established towards the university branch of the public school, the extension work given a larger field in the country and thus prove that its mission is a mission of service.

By Alfred D. Cridge

The evils of land monopoly are admitted by all who look into the question. Even in campaign times when the people are being frightened and threatened into voting against measures attacking land monopoly the paid and unpaid advocates of things as they are admit that land monopoly is a great evil and should not be allowed. Not one of the advocates of special privilege will defend the holding of vast tracts of land out of use in Oregon as good things. He simply opposes any and every ready measure that is proposed.

Suppose a man dying of starvation. He must not eat anything offered because it might kill him—the shock of having something to eat is very dangerous. Offer a small mouthful and the physician in charge says it will do more harm than good, and does not amount to anything. Offer a square meal and you are denounced as a would-be-murderer. The afflicted patient suffers the pangs of starvation in the midst of plenty, while his false advisers fare sumptuously every day on his inheritance and products. That is the situation with the working people of Oregon every winter. The only remedy allowed is charity meal tickets and charity beds for the idle men, and charity grocery orders for the women and children.

The Central Labor Council of Portland last winter appointed a committee on unemployment, and that committee went the accepted round for charity. It opened a barracks where beds were furnished. It bought several hundred dollars' worth of meal tickets. It did other things along that line. But it also studied the unemployment question. It found that there is enough idle land in Multnomah county alone to support the entire population of Oregon if men were allowed to use it and get the full return of their labors without paying rent or price to some speculator, or idler.

It found that hundreds of families would go out on the land if they had the tools whereby to work it. He found enormous rents being to speculators for use of the bare land of Portland while men went hungry for work and little children were insufficiently fed on charity soup. It found that in Oregon in the midst of hard times not less than $30,000,000 was being paid annually, mostly to a few speculators, corporations and absentee millionaires, for the use of Oregon—and Oregon created by Almighty God, who asks no rent of any of his children. It found one man renting a single block of land (less than an acre) and furnishing nothing but the land for $60,000 a year, not a dollar of which he earned or needed, or ever will earn or need, while children and women and men suffered for food. It found many other blocks. It found that land monopoly absorbed from the people of Oregon every year more than sufficient to supply them with all the benefits of government, all the benefits of good roads, all the credit necessary to put thousands of families on the land and to extend credit to all the struggling working farmers now on the land. The committee has recommended a measure that will take this annual ground rent created by the people—the laboring, working people—into the public treasury and use a part of it for the maintenance of public government, schools, roads, bridges, etc., and part of it for lending to men who wish to build homes in city or country.

It is a big mountain to tackle. It is a big contract to deliver, but the Central Labor Council has put out this measure for criticism, for advice, for correction, with the message that those who oppose its principles and its aims MUST PROPOSE SOMETHING BETTER TO SOLVE THE PROBLEM OF UNEMPLOYMENT. The big special interests of Oregon are sitting tight, standing pat, saying nothing, proposing nothing. They have $30,000,000 a year coming from the people paid to them for the privilege of living in Oregon. They do not have to propose any remedy for such a delightful condition—to them. It is not their move. It is the people's!

Any person wishing to secure a copy of this tentative measure should address the secretary of the Central Labor Council, E. J. Stack, Labor Temple, Portland, Oregon. The committee means business. The measure in some form along these lines will be submitted unless some thing better for the solution of the unemployment problem, and for the establishing of the people of Oregon in the ownership of homes of their own, and in the ownership of Oregon, is proposed.

Roy knew the perils, of darkness. Darkness furnishes the opportunity for undue intimacy, and it also makes light bills small. So Roy hastened to his office, got some fuse-plugs, and hastened over the bridge to the Willamette side. As he went he saw sundry happy couples in the gloaming, and his modesty was shocked. Reaching the Willamette end of the bridge, Roy inserted the fuse-plugs where they ought to go, jerked a switch lever—and lo, lights blazed forth along the bridge.

And the couples in the gloaming moved away. Roy says he turned on the lights because he didn't think the suspension bridge was the best place in the world for "spooners;" but there are those who say he turned on the lights because he is working for the P. R. L. & P. company, and that he realized that with the lights out his company was losing revenue from the county.

resolutions by Pomona Grange under the heading "Grange Favors Federal Agent," in your issue of July 22nd, one is lead to believe that said Grange has someone in view for a job on "Easy Street."

We don't need an expert in this "Neck of the Woods," we know what to do. What we need is help to do the work. For the past ten days I have been trying to get some one to help spray my orchard. There is a fine crop of apples, but it seems that the worms are to do the harvesting, for one man can't work the pump lever and guide the spray nozzle.

We need help in our hay fields, but our agricultural college graduates are all looking for expert jobs on easy street. Let the old duffers do their farming, of let it go undone is their idea. I don't know how it is in other localities, but for my part I know of but one O. A. C. graduate that went back to farming.

We will admit that we are from Missouri, but we are not of the "Show Me" kind.
