CLACKAMAS IS IN LUCKY FORM

Review of Valley Press Shows Several Counties That Don't Seem to Care About Home Trade

Clackamas county is showing up pretty well these days, outside of the matter of roads. The Courier has from time to time devoted some considerable space to the highways of this section—not with an idea simply to "kick," but in the hope that improvement would come. And now it appears that there is to be a change in road matters; the supervisors may all get fired, and we may have competent road engineers to superintend highway construction.

With this happy possibility looming before us, the Courier is glad to print such good news as it can find about the happy family at the courthouse. Elsewhere in this issue are some statistics from the state insurance commissioner's office that show how economically some of the county officers have been managed; and a review of the valley press shows that this county is well off in other ways, too.

Formerly whenever there was any county printing to be done, many of the county officers used to send the work to Portland, Chicago or elsewhere. In fact, there were county courts that played favorites so hard that the taxpayers "got next" to it, and at a budget meeting passed a resolution practically ordering the county officials to let all official printing to the lowest Clackamas county bidder. Since then the rule has been pretty well observed—though there have been some county officials who continued to slip things now and then to Portland houses.

However, Clackamas county is far more loyal to its home trade, as far as county officials are concerned, than are some other counties. It is to be noted, for instance, by a review of the Benton county expenditures for the past four or five months, that more warrants were drawn for Portland job printing houses than for all the Benton county newspapers combined. Considering the fact that Benton county is pretty far away from Portland, there can be only three reasons for this: Benton county printing plants are not equipped to do the work, or they have combined to hold prices up to a prohibitive figure, or the Benton county officials don't care a whoop about the business men in their own community who gave them the right to disburse public funds.

From careful study of the Benton county papers, and from remarks that they printed during recent political squabbles, two things would appear to be true: that the print shops down there can do any kind of work that can be done in Portland, and that there is a lot of "politics" loose in the county. That appears to answer two of the reasons for the rush of work to Portland, and even throws some light on the third possibility.

Study of the exchanges that come to the Courier also show that other counties aside from Benton have the Portland habit to a more or less degree. Study of some of these exchanges also shows that the several Willamette valley communities are excellently equipped with printing plants, and that they can do any class of work required. And usually the local printer, or local merchant, or local manufacturer, will give the people of his own community just as good a price—and far better service—than the foreign jobber.

The one thing above all else that will help the Willamette valley—and the whole state of Oregon—is support of home industries. And this means not only Portland industries, but all OREGON industries. It means support of the business man, the manufacturer and printer. It means support by the county officials, as well as by everybody else. Clackamas county is fortunate in having a majority of its county officials who do this—it is far more fortunate than Benton county. And as soon as the few county officers here who now send their work to Portland quit their work, and patronize Clackamas county business houses, just so much sooner will this county be luckier still. Nothing so lowers the chances of a public official for popularity as "throwing down" the people of the district in which he holds office. And nothing makes for general satisfaction like home trade.

Clackamas county has realized this to a marked degree—it is too bad for the general development of the valley and the state that other counties have not followed in Clackamas county's footsteps.

COUNTY DOES WELL

Economy is Rule in Public Affairs and in Sheriff's Office

Tabulations based upon expenditures of 1914, as printed in a recent number of the Oregon Voter, show that Clackamas county has made an enviable record in the line of economical management of its routine affairs. The figures are prepared by John R. Richardson, expert in the office of Insurance Commissioner Harvey Wells, and are a part of a series of reports upon county expenditures that he had drawn up. While previous tabulations by Mr. Richardson show that Clackamas county had spent a third of a million dollars on its roads during 1914, this extravagance is somewhat made up for in the other details of county administration.

Taking a standard outlay as a basis for figuring, Mr. Richardson ranks Clackamas county second in the matter of economy, it being exceeded only by Yamhill county. According to Mr. Richardson's figures, the county officers spent 41 percent less than the unit basis in 1914; that is, they saved 41 percent of what would have been a fair and reasonable sum that might have been expended in routine county upkeep.

For 1914 Clackamas county official expenses—salaries of county officials and offices expenses—amounted to $55,081.99. Mr. Richardson figures that the county might have spent $94,663, and not have made an unreasonable outlay. As it didn't spend the latter sum on its officers, it made a saving of 41 percent. In actual expense, Clackamas county ranks 11th in the amount spent during 1914 on routine upkeep.

The county court in 1914 cost Clackamas county $2,238.45, for salaries, mileage, expenses and so forth. According to Mr. Richardson, an outlay of $4,027 would not have been unreasonable, so the county court "saved" 44 percent of its allowance. In actual cost, Clackamas county ranks twenty-second in the amount expended for its county court.

In regard to the expenses of the sheriff's office in 1914, Clackamas county saved 31 percent, according to the Richardson system of figuring. The expense of the sheriff's office during that year for salaries and office cost was $4,940.28. Mr. Richardson figures that $7,144 would not have been an exorbitant outlay. In cost the sheriff's office ranked 16th as compared with other counties in the state during 1914.

The showing for the county in the Richardson tables is very creditable for 1914 in everything except the matter of road costs. It seems odd that officials who could manage their office affairs so economically should have "fallen down" in the matter of highways. But maybe it was not the fault of the officials, but of the road supervisors.

GRANGE OPPOSES EXPERT.

Maple Lane Local Not in Favor of Federal Aid to Farmers.

At the regular meeting of the Maple Lane Grange, No. 296, held August 7, the following resolution was passed unanimously:

Whereas, It has been reported that at the Pomona Grange meeting held at Sandy on July 14th, there was passed a resolution favoring the appointment of a county agricultural expert for Clackamas county, but leaving the subject open for discussion till the next meeting of Pomona to be held at Logan in October; and,

Whereas, We believe we are already afflicted with too many expensive and useless commissions and supervisors; and

Whereas, We believe that the best thing that could be done for our county would be to lower her tax rate; and

Whereas, We greatly fear that our 1915 taxes will eclipse any previous effort;

Therefore, Be it Resolved, That we are opposed to the appointment of said expert or of the county court increasing our tax budget for any such purpose.

GRANGE TAKES LEAD.

Lane County Betterment Given Big Boost by Pomona Members.

Adoption of a road patrol system for repairing roads before the damage is extensive and its repair expensive has been endorsed by the Lane Pomona Grange, reports the Eugene Register. Other progressive steps favored are the following:

A public market at Eugene where producers and consumers can transact business direct.

Improving the dairy industry by weeding out unprofitable cows, practicing more economical feeding and management and better breeding.

Uniform breeding and handling and co-operative marketing of farm livestock.

Developing the poultry industry by co-operative breeding, packing and marketing clubs.

A system of drainage projects. The grange was addressed by C. E. Spence, master of the State Grange, who stated that too much money is given to road contractors.

Political Note.

The firm of Brownell & Stone now maintains two offices, one at the old stand where it has been located for over 20 years, and the other in the Beaver block.

CROP OUTLOOK CONTINUES BIG

FEDERAL FORECAST PLEDGES
BIG YIELD OF ALL
FARM PRODUCE

ONLY APPLES SHOW DECREASE

Condition of Crops Also Excels in the Main That of Former Years, According to Experts

The crop forecast issued by the federal government, under the direction of the Weather Bureau and the Department of Agriculture, and dated August 9, should make the heart of every Oregon farmer glow with pride and joy. There is every indication of bumper crops in all lines of produce, and in fact but one yield shows a tendency to decrease over former years. This unfortunate crop is apples; but as apples never were included in the big money-makers for the state, the decrease will not cut very deeply into the general joy.

The yield of winter wheat, it is estimated, will total 14,000,000 bushels. The total yield for 1914 in the state was 13,684,000 bushels.

In spring wheat the outlook is even better. The yield promised for this year in Oregon is 3,650,000 bushels; which is far in excess of the 2,920,000 bushels harvested in 1914.

Oats this year, according to the forecast for Oregon, will yield 14,300,000 bushels. Last year Oregon harvested but 12,744,000 bushels. Similarly the yield of barley this year will be far ahead of the 1914 total, as the forecast predicts a harvest of 4,240,000 bushels as against 3,660,000 bushels last year.

The forecast for potatoes is also encouraging, considering the better market conditions. According to the government experts Oregon will have 6,730,000 bushels of potatoes this year. In 1914 with a dull market, the yield was but 4,763,000 bushels.

The federal experts find that Oregon's hay crop this year will be 1,740,000 tons. In 1914 the state yielded but 1,716,000 tons.

Apples, which are a fussy crop at best in Oregon, will fall 200,000 bushels short this year of the yield made in 1914, it being estimated that only 3,340,000 bushels will be harvested.

Clover this year will yield 90 percent of 1914 crop, if the forecast is correct and accurate. Alfalfa is 91 per cent perfect at the present time this year—last year on August 1 it was 94 per cent perfect. Prolonged rainy season held the crop back this year, but the quality is well up to the Oregon standard.

Pasture crops are conditioned as 94 per cent this year, as against 92 per cent this time last year; while hops are 93 per cent perfect, as against 90 per cent at the same time in 1914. The hop crop this year is ripening early in Oregon, and pickers will be busy before the end of the present month throughout the Willamette valley.

HOW ABOUT IT?

Weird Tale in Oregonian Tells of Mishap to Young Woman

Wednesday's Oregonian decorated its front page with a story recounting the adventures of Miss Kathryn Albright, who is said to live "near Milwaukee." According to the ever-truthful Oregonian, Miss Albright was walking near Crystal Lake park, when two men threw a blanket over her head, forced her into an automobile, tried to get her to take a drink of whiskey, and then set off in haste in the general direction of Clackamas.

Miss Albright, according to the pioneer paper of Multnomah county, fainted at this juncture of events, and when she came to she was wandering around in the outskirts of Woodstock, where she was taken in charge by the police.

The story is quite exciting. If it is true, the sheriff's deputy in Milwaukee ought to leave his usual station near the depot and investigate it slightly. If it isn't true, "Miss Albright" must have needed an alibi for being out late.

DOG BITES MAN

William Gaskell, 70 Years Old, Painfully Hurt on Road

County Health Officer O. A. Welch has ordered confined a collie dog that last week attacked William Gaskell, 70 years old, on the highway near the Bargfield home, and which bit the elderly gentleman on the hands and arms. Examination of the dog will show whether or not he was afflicted with rabies.

Mr. Gaskell says that the animal attacked him without any warning, knocking him to the ground. In his efforts to fight the beast off he was severely bitten on the hands and arms. His wounds were dressed by a physician, and it is not believed that any bad effects will follow.

LEST WE FORGET

Economy Figures on County Management Refer to Year 1914

Tuesday's Enterprise has a sweet little editorial congratulating the county upon the fine economical showing made by its officers in the reports prepared by Mr. Richardson of the state insurance commissioner's office. The figures alluded to by the Enterprise, and printed by it, are also printed in this week's Courier. The Enterprise editorial closes with a cute little sentence informing the public that the figures are accurate as "prejudices and personal feeling did not enter into the process of preparing the tables."

It is nice of the Enterprise to emphasize that point, for the republican paper's editorial doesn't mention the fact that the figures deal with the year 1914. It congratulates the county on having an economical administration, but it also intimates that the present county officers are the ones who had something to do with making the record. Lest the Enterprise idea gain too much credence, it is well to remember that THE ECONOMY RECORD IS THE RECORD OF COUNTY OFFICERS WHO WERE ON THE JOB IN 1914.

The sheriff who made the record alluded to in the report was E. T. Mass. The year in which the record was made was particularly busy one for the sheriff's office. It was the year in which the sheriff obtained a conviction of the Friars' Club. It was the year in which the sheriff obtained a conviction in regard to the notorious Hotel Gratton, at Milwaukie. It was the year when Erickson was stopped selling liquor. It was the year in which the heavy expenses growing out of the Oswego riots occurred. It was the year when Detective Levings, of Portland, was "working on the Ardenwald murder" case, and piling up expenses for the sheriff's office. In short, it was one of the most expensive years that the sheriff's office of Clackamas county has ever seen—and yet the office ranked fourth among all in the state in the matter of economy.

The Enterprise didn't mention this—either in regard to the sheriff's office or in regard to any of the others. So the Courier does mention it—just so people will not forget where the economy and the benefit to the taxpayers came from.

MORE WATER TROUBLE.

Milwaukie Again Tied Up in Its Plans For Bull Run.

Tuesday of this week Milwaukie's plans for the use of Bull Run water were again tied up, when Circuit Judge Campbell signed another temporary injunction against the installation of the new plant. The injunction was obtained by one of the private water concerns, which alleged that the city was violating franchises and that it was depriving the old water companies of their business without giving recompense. The injunction is a further move on the part of the owners of the private water companies to force the city to buy the old plants and distributing systems.

Petitions calling for an election to place before the voters the matter of buying the former water systems have been circulated in Milwaukie, and have been generally signed. People opposed to the purchase of the old plants are perfectly willing to have the matter on the ballot, feeling that the majority will be against any such purchase.

The plans for Bull Run service in Milwaukie, through a connection with the Portland system, call for a paralleling of most of the present mains in the northern city. The Sellwood water plant is the only one that has not taken an active part in the fight against Bull Run, and this liberal stand has won the Sellwoods many friends in Milwaukie.

AUTO OVER BANK

Travelers Have Close Call When Machine Leaves Road

Perils of the west side road from the county seat to Portland were again demonstrated this week when an automobile driven by C. T. Wolf, of Silverton, skidded near Bolton and plunged through a frail fence to the bottom of a ten-foot embankment. Occupants of the car were thrown from the machine, but fortunately did not fall under it.

The automobile, after leaving the road, tore its way through a board sidewalk beside the highway, and then toppled over the edge of the embankment on which the narrow road runs. Its fall was stopped by a more substantial fence at the foot of the incline, where a stocky post stopped the car's wild career. One wheel was torn from the car, and the total damage will amount to about $200.

STREET WORK STARTS.

County Seat Sees Beginning of Rehabilitation of Highway.

During the past week actual work of repaving Main street, Oregon City, was started by the Worswick Paving company. Brick was torn up from the lower end of the county seat's business thoroughfare, and this material was used as a foundation for the asphaltic concrete mixing plant at the foot of Twelfth street. Paving operations will be thoroughly underway by the first of next week.

NEIGHBORHOOD ROW IS AIRED

Prosecution of Frank and Bernard S. Timms Rivals Stunts Done by Charlie Chaplin on Film

Tuesday of this week about everybody who lives near Concord, and a good share of the people who live in Oregon City, attended Justice Sievers' court to hear the trial of the case of the State of Oregon against Bernard and Frank Timms, charged with disturbing the peace. Trial started in the morning, soon developed into a comedy more humorous than that offered at Charlie Schram's Grand theatre by Charles Chaplin, and by mid afternoon reached a climax in a verdict of not guilty.

The jury that heard the testimony and rendered the verdict—which incidentally brought out hearty applause—was composed of E. T. Mass, H. J. Bigger, A. J. Knightly, W. C. Greene and Harry U. Myers. After a trial lasting about six hours, the jury was out almost five minutes before agreeing upon its findings. Probably it wouldn't have stayed out five minutes, had it not been that the day was warm, and that it wanted a pitcher of ice water brought to it. Immediately after getting the ice water the verdict was reached.

Testimony introduced by the state was to the effect that on the evening of the fourth of August the Timms brothers had "entertained" two young women at their home under pretense of selling them a dog. In the course of the evening, said the state's witness, the night had been made hideous by a "screaming talking machine," and the hosts and guests had all reclined upon a single bed. One of the state's witnesses was sure of this, she said, for she had watched the proceedings from her window, a block and a half away. It was also charged that the defendants had used vile and improper language; to-wit, that one of them had said "it is a heluva fine evening."

Testimony for the defense was a direct contradiction of this. Two young women had come out to buy a dog, had remained while the Timms boys got a bachelor supper for themselves, and then had hastened away with the dog. The reason for the prosecution, it was said, was a neighborhood row, arising from the alleged deprivations of one of the Timms horses in a neighbor's cabbage patch, and from a dispute over a line fence. As to the evening, one of the Timms boys said emphatically that it was a "dandy," but denied all profanity in connection with it.

Interesting sidelights on community life in the Timms neighborhood were brought out in the course of the five hours of testimony. One married man was placed upon the stand, while his wife sat in the audience, and was forced to admit that when the young women who sought the dog had inquired of him the way to the Timms house he had offered to show them, and had entered into conversation with them. He told them, he said, that his name was "Brown," and didn't mention that he was married. With considerable embarrassment he said that he had not been at all shocked when one of the young women had jokingly told him that if the Timms boys were not home she and her friend would have to spend the night with him.

"Did you think they would really do that," asked one of the attorneys in the case.

The married man who had told the women that his name was "Brown," said he didn't really think they would—and his wife in the audience twisted a newspaper tightly into a roll and looked daggers at him.

One of the state's witnesses admitted under cross examination that one of the Timms boys had formerly "frequently called upon her." Asked her idea of propriety, she admitted under coaching from the attorney that she thought a young man calling on a young lady should sit in one rocking chair on one side of the room, while the young lady sat in another rocking chair on the other side of the room, and that the young man ought to go home at nine o'clock. This code, she admitted, had not always been strictly followed in her own case.

Testimony in regard to the "screaming talking machine" that so annoyed some of the neighbors, brought out the fact that it was a phonograph that cost about $250 and that many of the other neighbors liked to hear it, as it was "grand music."

Connected with the case was some comedy that did not come out at the trial. This occurred a week ago Wednesday evening, when a frantic call was sent to Mr. Wilson, who works in the sheriff's office with Mr. Hackett to hasten at once and

UP TO COUNTY COURT.

Appropriation of $400 for Fair Exhibits so Far Undivided.

In spite of the fact that Guy T. Hunt, of Estacada, newly elected member of the Clackamas county fair board, is quoted in last week's Estacada Progress as saying that Chairman Grant B. Dimick of the board "refuses" to give Estacada a share of the money apportioned the county for fair exhibits, Judge Dimick says that Estacada still has a chance to get some of the money.

After reading the article in the Progress, Judge Dimick said that the matter of the division of the $400 appropriation was out of his hands, and was not in the hands of the county fair board.

"The $400 was appropriated by the legislature for the collection of exhibits for the state fair," said Judge Dimick, when discussing the matter.

"Each member of the fair board is under bond to see that this money is spent as directed by the county court. The $400 will not be given to the Canby fair. As far as we are concerned it will not be given to any fair. It is to be paid for the collection of exhibits at the state fair—exhibits that will represent the resources of this county when they are displayed at Salem. Some of these exhibits may be shown at Canby, doubtless many of them will be. In fact Mr. Miles is now engaged in collecting exhibits, but they are exhibits for the state fair. The fact that they will be shown at Milwaukie, and may be shown at Molalla and Estacada, too, has nothing to do with how they are paid for. None of the $400 in question has been paid out yet—Mr. Miles is being paid by private individuals for the work he is doing.

"The county court has not instructed the county fair board how it wants this $400 spent. If the county court orders us to give some of it to Estacada we will do so. We will do the same thing if the county court orders some of it given to Molalla or Milwaukie—or to Canby. But until we get definite instructions from the county court, the $400 will be spent solely for the collection of exhibits for the state fair at Salem. That is what the money is for, and the county fair board is bonded to see that the money is spent only in that way."

It is therefore up to any communities that want some of the $400 appropriation to make a further appeal to the county court, and not to the county fair board.

FISH TO FEED FISH

Propagate Minnows to Maintain Trout in Crater Lake

Superintendent W. G. Steel is experimenting this summer in the propagation in Crater Lake of small fish of the innumerable minnow family. It is a problem not the easiest to solve, for occupying the crater of an extinct volcano, the lake has no shallows; and no streams enter or leave it in which small fish may find refuge. Yet the supply of natural fish food must be considerably and immediately increased if the magnificent trout fishing in this lake is to remain at its present excellence. Minnows must be brought from distant waters under adverse conditions.

Whether it be from temperature or the quality of the water is not known, but it is the testimony of expert anglers that, pound for pound, Crater Lake trout are harder fighters than trout found elsewhere.

"Around the edge of the lake," said General Superintendent Mark Daniels recently, "there is no foliage to entangle your hook and line, and it is the ideal place for the amateur fisherman. When I was there the lake was so clear that you could see to a depth of forty feet. The first fish I caught I saw take the fly. I saw every motion of his body until I finally landed him on the bank, which I only did with the aid of one of the concessioners in the park. I do not know of any other place in the world where an amateur fisherman can swing his fly in any direction without danger of catching it on some twig, and when he hooks his fish, watch his every motion as he fights for freedom.

stop the "shocking goings-on." Mr. Wilson was unable to get his automobile in sailing order quickly enough, so with Constable Jack Frost he commandeered a passing benzine buggy and ordered full speed ahead for the scene of the fuss. Arriving there the sheriff found nothing—the young women had in the meantime bought the dog they went after, and had gone home on the interurban. The sheriff did hear, however, the "prosecution's side of the case" from some of the unfriendly neighbors.

Returning to the county seat the sheriff said nothing for publication about the evening auto dash, but next day, after warrants had been served on the Timms boys, he gave the Enterprise a cute little story saying that the Timms party had broken up early Thursday morning, and that he had Thursday afternoon placed the Timms brothers under arrest. All intimation that the sheriff had been made the cats-paw in a neighborhood row was carefully eliminated from the story. When an Enterprise reporter was asked why the "story" was written in that way, he replied:

"The sheriff wanted it that way." And the county will pay the witness fees and the mileage bill. But at that, as comedy, it was worth it.

NIMRODS MUST OBEY U. S. LAW

FEDERAL GAME STATUTES ARE TO BE RIGIDLY ENFORCED
THROUGHOUT OREGON

ALL STATE LAWS DISREGARDED

Sportsmen Who Find Conflict Between Requirements Will Be Sane Only "Minding" Uncle Sam.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 12.—With the approach of the open season for shooting wild fowl, the United States Department of Agriculture is warning sportsmen that the Federal regulations as amended October 1, 1914, will be strictly enforced. Some misunderstanding has arisen from the fact that the various state laws do not always conform to the Federal regulations. This is regarded as unfortunate but in such cases the department must insist upon the observance of the federal regulations.

The department will consider any recommendations submitted in good faith for amendment of the regulations, but will hold no public hearings thereon, nor will it amend the regulations prior to October 15, 1915. It is the purpose of the department to conform the regulations to the wishes of the majority of sportsmen so far as it can be done and at the same time give wild fowl the necessary protection.

Federal regulations divide the United States into two zones. Zone No. 1, the breeding zone, includes the states of Oregon, Idaho, Colorado, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and all states north of them. Zone No. 2, the wintering zone, includes all states south of those named.

The regulations prescribe seasons as follows in Zone No. 1: Waterfowl, open season in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, October 1 to January 16.

Rails, coots and gallinules, open season in Oregon and Washington, October 1 to January 16. Woodcock, October 1 to December 1 is federal open season. This will be closely enforced.

Shore birds, black-breasted and golden plover, Jacksnipe and yellowlegs, open season in Oregon and Washington, October 1 to December 16.

Under the federal law there must be no shooting between sunset and sunrise, even during open season. The purpose of the law is to protect game birds while in breeding grounds.

Insectivorous birds protected indefinitely. Band-tailed pigeons, cranes, swans, curlew, smaller shore birds, and wood ducks protected until September 1, 1918.

TOURISTS' BOOK OUT.

Commercial Club Issues Aid to Sight-Seeers in County.

In answer to a demand for a booklet giving information about the chief points of interest in and about Oregon City, the Commercial club has just issued a booklet containing an indexed map of the county seat, and giving directions for reaching nearby points of interest. The booklet is ready for distribution at the publicity bureau booth, and copies will also be given local merchants and business houses. The booklet will also be on distribution at the Portland Commercial club and at the leading Portland hotels.

The booklet not only tells where the chief points of interest in the county and county seat are situated, but also gives directions to reach them and has as well brief paragraphs referring to the historical points in the county seat. The map of Oregon City will be of particular value to automobile parties who are visiting the county seat, as it shows at a glance the main roads leading to all points of historic interest, and also shows the location of the places themselves.

MISS M. L. HOLMES DIES.

Daughter of Prominent Pioneer Passes Away at Rose Farm.

Miss Mary Louise Holmes, one of the most prominent women in Clackamas county, died at her home on Rose Farm near Oregon City Sunday night. She was born January 30, 1845, and was the daughter of the late William Livingstone and Mary Louise Holmes, who were pioneers of 1842.

Miss Holmes was well known for her prominence in church and charitable work. She was an active member of St. Paul's Episcopal church and had been president of the King's Daughters since the body was formed 18 years ago. She was a charter member of St. Paul's Guild and had been worthy matron of Pioneer chapter, Order of Eastern Star.

Besides her sister, Miss Holmes is survived by two nephews, Charles Holmes of Oregon City, and William Holmes, of Spokane, and an aunt, Mrs. Martin, of Spokane.
