

RELIEF SHIP SAILS AFTER ARCTIC EXPLORER.

MORE ABOUT STARK

Mr. Robbins Differs Yet Further With Well-known Correspondent

What you would probably call "The trail of the serpent" has been over me so often lately that I have not found time to give public consideration to your notice of my "pied" letter until now. I call it just a plain case of being very busy, taking care of crops, and I think that if there is any serpent involved in human affairs they are mostly of the sailors' sea variety. I am sorry to have become involved in this controversy through false pretenses on your part. Having worked my way out of wage and mortgage slavery by long years of faithful service, having bought my freedom and risen to the rank of MASTER, I thought I had met a foe of even a higher cast, one who had ever scorned to be a slave; but it seems I was mistaken. You are an interest-paying slave and I am much disappointed and humiliated, but I have gone too far to turn back.

Yes, I am somewhat of a fault-finder, and the difference between us in that respect is only a degree. My fault-finding was mostly with what I considered a very unreasonable fault-finder, and I found much to uphold and defend against your wholesale and retail attacks, especially on your brother farmers and their attempts to better themselves by organization. There might be some ground to criticize the grange on its stand on public questions—I criticize some things myself—though I bow to majority rule, but you have discussed and ridiculed domestic affairs that should only concern present or prospective.

If I looked through your glasses I should consider the task of improving the condition of the farmers a hopeless one and should quietly subside. If all the farmers are stupid mollycoddlers, and all their organizations, so far as flat failures, led by lawyers, politicians and a few perceptive, never sweat, office seeking farmers, how in the name of reason is there any chance for successful co-operation between them and intelligent prodigies like yourself who can see so well how things ought to be done, but confessedly can do nothing worth while for themselves. These poor common farmers who know no better than to be grangers, are getting along very well if conditions are a little adverse. Most of them accumulate a competence for old age, have good, comfortable homes, pay off their mortgages, loan their surplus to beginners and enjoy all the luxuries of life such as pianos and automobiles. If you care so badly you must be constituted like the steam engine that Lincoln told about, which had such a big whistle that it took all the steam to blow it and the engine had to stop. If you did not blow the danger whistle so persistently you would have more steam for business purposes.

Because there is economic disturbance, unemployment and other things out of balance, does not prove that the experience of ages is entirely wrong and we should throw it all away and begin anew. Small but long continued mistakes in our way of living has produced much disease and suffering, but it would be disastrous to throw away all food and clothing on that account. Because some have not just advantages in accumulating capital, does not prove that capitalism is wrong; because some employers oppress labor does not prove that all employers exploit labor or that the wage system is entirely wrong, and because interest, rent and profit are often excessive does not entirely discredit them as useful agencies in human affairs. You deny their usefulness but it would be more to the point if you would give good reasons, for you are demanding fundamental changes and the burden of proof is on you.

However, I will give some reasons for my belief. Capital in every form is the balance wheel of society. It enables men to accumulate a surplus during their productive years to support them in old age, and whatever a man has produced by his labor, other men should not have the use of it without paying for the privilege. And why should there be an attempt to prevent men for making contracts for future payments of the value of property and additional payments called interest, for the use of the property until payments completed. As for profit—reasonable profit—that is only a means of securing payment for service rendered. To buy selected articles, guarantee, ensemble and hold them for the convenience of prospective buyers and users, that is a service that deserves pay, and might cost less or might cost more if done by government employees.

I would like to see all debts—honorable debts—wiped out by being honestly paid. A debt is nothing but a contract to pay for value received, and to expect to wipe that out in human affairs, and to keep it wiped out, is some dream. You say interest, rent and profit are the means by which a few live in luxury off the toil of many, when there are untold thousands that have made a start by paying one or more of the three, and as a result are living prosperous even to luxurious lives and there are other thousands who are spending their declining years with a bare living income from interest or rent who would otherwise be dependent on public charity.

You ask me who should own the land, and my reply is that a farm should be owned by the man who has made it or to some one to whom he has conveyed it by sale or otherwise, and it should be taken for granted that the owner will use it or rent it to some user. Young people should have all opportunity to go on unimproved land and make a home and when it is made, it should be theirs subject only to the payment of honest debts, public or private. The human nest is a more complicated affair than that of the birds, and we are more dependent on our kind, and so go in debt to get what we want and we generally pay the debt and have a good nest, croakers to the contrary.

The long term debts on rural credits are not proposed to be compulsory as you must know, but are simply long for the safety of the debtor. He would be allowed to pay whatever amount he could, but only a small annual payment should be compulsory. These long term loans at low rates would let idle men, idle land and idle money to work and would go far to relieve unemployment and other evil conditions, except the communal madness of war.

The producers of the world are not generally in poverty and if they are largely in debt it is mostly to other producers. As population increases, and unimproved land becomes scarcer, it is most inevitable that debts will increase, for the only way to get farms is to buy them and the farms have to furnish the most of the purchase price. It is not to be expected that debts will disappear for as one is paid another is contracted. There is a continual change going on, for some need or wish to sell and others need or wish to buy.

I am not worrying about the little I lost in the Equity business venture. I did not have much expectation, but went in to help try it out, and I think about the only mistake was in getting the wrong man to run it. It would be necessary to depend on some manager and if he is lacking, all is gone. It takes money to make the mare go, and she often falls then, even in co-operative business.

CITROLAX

Best thing for constipation, sour stomach, lazy liver and sluggish bowels. Stops a sick headache almost at once. Gives a most thorough and satisfactory flushing—no pain, no nausea. Keeps your system cleansed, sweet and wholesome.—R. H. Weihecht, Salt Lake City, Utah, writes: "I find Citrolax the best laxative I ever used. Does not gripe—no unpleasant after-effects."—Jones Drug Co.

Runaway Is Found

Orville Albright, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Albright, of the county seat, who ran away from his home over a week ago, was found early last week by the constable at Jefferson. The boy's parents believed when he went away that he was on his way to San Francisco.

TIMBER GOES FAR

Douglas Fir Travels 10,000 Miles to Get Only 1,400

While the forests in which Douglas fir for use at Port Nelson, on Hudson Bay, are only 1400 miles from the northern community, the timber itself traveled 10,000 miles to make the trip. Lack of north-and-south railroad facilities in Canada is the reason for this.

Timber for use in building docks at Port Nelson was cut near the Canadian border, and first shipped to Vancouver, B. C., where it was loaded on vessels and sent through the Panama Canal, up the Atlantic seaboard, and then through the arctic waters to its destination. The timber, after being cut, traveled exactly 9,900 miles, or seven times the distance "as the crow flies" between the place where it grew and the place where it was used.

Thiesinger Called Suicide

A jury empaneled by Coroner Hempstead on Monday found that Jacob Thiesinger, who was found dead in the Abernathy canyon this week, had probably committed suicide. Thiesinger recently sold his two-acre farm on the Abernathy for $200, and started for Seattle to find work. Unable to obtain employment there, he returned to Oregon City and tried to repurchase his home. Unable to do this, it is believed, that the man, who was 42 years of age, crept into the brush and ended his life.

Club to Meet

The Women's Social Service club of Oak Grove and Milwaukee will hold its regular meeting with a basket picnic twelfth, in the grove on the river road west of Silver Springs station. An executive board meeting is called at the same place at eleven o'clock.

POLITICAL AGITATORS

POLITICIANS WHO CAPITALIZE STRIFE A MENACE TO GOVERNMENT.

Neglect of Agricultural and Industrial Opportunities a National Crime.

By Peter Radford.

There never was a time in the history of this nation when we needed statesmen more or agitators less than at the present moment. The opportunities now afforded us on land and sea demand the best there is in statecraft and the possibilities that are confronting us call for national issues that unite the people, build industry and expand trade. The agricultural and industrial development of this nation has suffered severely at the hands of agitators who have sent torpedoes crashing into the port side of business and whose neglect of the interests of the farmer makes them little less than political criminals. We want no more of these evil spirits to predominate in government. Too long their hysterical cry has sent a shiver down the spinal column of industry. Too long have the political agitators capitalized strife, pillaged progress and murdered opportunity. An industrial corpse is not a desirable thing, a crippled business an achievement or neglect an accomplishment about which any representative of the government has a right to boast.

Issues that Breed Agitators Should be Eliminated.

The political agitator must be eliminated from public life before thoughtful consideration can be given to a constructive program in government. The liquor question is the most prolific breeding ground for agitators and whether pro or anti, the hatch is equally as undesirable. This article is in no sense a discussion of the liquor question but deals solely and by way of illustration with the political products of that issue. Other subjects will be dealt with in the order of their importance.

In the history of our government the liquor issue has never produced a constructive statesman worth mentioning and it never will. It has sent more freights to Congress, Lilliputians to the Senate and incompetents to office than any other political issue under the sun. The recent experience of the English Parliament which lashed itself into a fury over the liquor question has a lesson that it is well for the farmers of this nation to observe; for the subject in some form or other is constantly before the public for solution and oftentimes to the exclusion of more important problems to the American plowman.

Too Many Political Drunkards.

Lloyd George, the prohibition leader of Europe who led the prohibition fight in England, has declared that he will never again take a drink politically and there are many American politicians—pro and anti—who would render their country a service by climbing on the water wagon or signing a pledge of political temperance. Too often our legislative halls are turned into political bar-rooms and many of the members become intoxicated on liquor discussions. We have too many political drunkards—pro and anti—in our public affairs. No one who is a slave to the political liquor habit is quite so capable of dealing with the business affairs of government as the sober and industrious. We have few public men in this day who are strong enough to resist the temptation of strong drink politically and when the demon Rum once becomes firmly entrenched in the mind of a politician, he is less capable of meeting the demands for constructive statesmanship now confronting this nation.

We have in this country too many red-nosed politicians—both pro and anti. A candidate with political delirium tremens, a preacher with political snakes in his boots and an agitator drunk on the liquor question are the saddest sights in civilization and they should all be forced to take the political Koolay Cure.

It is far more important in government to make it easier for those who toil to eat than to make it more difficult for a few to get drunk. There is not one person in one hundred of our rural population that ever touches liquor but we all eat three times a day.

THE LAYMAN'S DUTY

There never was a time when preachers and politicians formed an unholy alliance that civilization did not shrink out and Christianity cry aloud. Since the beginning of government, politicians have sought to decoy the ministry into the meshes of politics and make them carry banners in political processions. They have taken the ministry to the mountain-top of power and offered to make them monarch of all they surveyed, and while most of them have said, "Get thee behind me Satan," a few have fallen with a crash that has shaken every pulpit in Christendom.

Record Auto Price.

The Gresham Outlook, of current issue, tells us that times are booming in its own town, and cites as proof thereof the recent sale of an automobile. The auto was purchased for four dollars and two cents of wood. Let us take this too seriously, the Outlook adds that it was a very ancient auto, and that it will be used henceforth as a wood saw. Even at that, four dollars and two cents of wood is a good price to pay for some autos.
