ON BEING PENNY WISE

Maple Lane local of the state grange has gone on record as being opposed to the employment in this country of a federal farm expert. The local, in a set of resolutions published in the Courier last week, expresses the opinion that "we are already afflicted with too much expensive and useless commissioners" and "we greatly fear that our 1915 taxes will eclipse any previous effort." And primarily for these reasons Maple Lane does not want the county court to pay its share of the cost of a federal farm expert who would labor in Clackamas county.

There appears to be a confusion of ideas among Maple Lane folk. In the first place they fear higher taxes, and in the second place they seem to believe that a federal farm expert will be about as useful as a road supervisor trying to make a hard surface road out of rolled, wet, sand. Maple Lane is justified in not wanting higher taxes; but the community does Uncle Sam an injustice in thinking that federal expert agriculturists don't know their business.

If there is any bureau in our national government that is doing real and great work for the development of these United States, it is the department of agriculture. Sometimes the Department of Agriculture moves in dark and mysterious ways. Occasionally it establishes an experimental station that does not appear to be of material benefit to the community in which it is placed. For instance there is the famous "Dutch bulb farm" near Bellingham. Bellingham, and Whatcom county, Washington, are more interested in mines and fruit raising than in Dutch bulbs, but in spite of that the Dutch bulb farm is doing valuable work. And every government experimental station is doing good work, and is publishing its findings in frequent bulletins, which are of inestimable value to those who study them.

Moreover, the government agricultural experts are men who are devoted to their work, men who want to make two stalks grow where none grew before. They are not typical of many government employees, who are on the job solely for the salary they get. They don't get much salary, but they are on the job because a love of plant life is born in them, and because they would rather work around beds of growing things than do anything else in the world. And they can help any and all who listen to their advice.

While the employment of a federal expert in the county might add a fraction of a mill to the tax rate, there is every reason to believe that a little good advice on how to run a farm, or how to rotate crops, on how to breed stock, on how to abate insect pests, might do a very great deal for the farmers. In fact such advice that the government offers would enable the farmers to so increase their profits that they would not object to paying the fraction of a mill in extra taxes.

Clackamas county has some superb farms. Clackamas county has a soil that is filled with life-energy for nearly all kinds of crops. Clackamas county ought to be the banner farming county of the Willamette valley, for it has everything in its favor. But there are many farms in this county that do not pay the interest upon the mortgages that grace them—and these farms fail to pay simply because the men or women who operate them do not take advantage of the opportunities that the soil, location and climate offer. A federal agriculturist, a federal farm expert, would be able to tell these unfortunate farmers how to get double or treble the returns from the land that they now get. Thus they would pay the slight increase in taxation that might be caused if the county paid its share of the expert's salary.

It is to be hoped that the grange as a whole will ask the county court to avail itself of the opportunity of getting federal advice for Clackamas county farmers. It is penny wise and pound foolish to object to the employment of such an expert on the grounds that it would increase taxation. The grange as a whole seems to take this view of the matter, and it is to be regretted that Maple Lane local—owing perhaps to local conditions and prejudices—should go on record as being opposed to the plan. The Courier trusts that when the grange meets again in October, favorable action will be taken in the matter of securing the services of a government expert for this county.

HINT TO WRITERS

The Courier has long been proud of the fact that it holds its columns open to correspondents, and that it offers a public forum from which any man or woman may express his or her views upon questions of public or semi-public interest. The Courier believes that one of the fields of a country newspaper can perform valuable service for the community it serves in offering a medium for the open interchange of views of any subjects which may interest the reading public.

For this reason the Courier has permitted the greatest leeway possible to those who favor it with letters or articles. This paper asks only that the letters be signed by the names of the writers, as proof of the good faith in which they are offered. If requested the name will not be published. However, this leeway cannot be stretched to cover personal abuse or libel.

The Courier is constrained to mention this just now because a number of recent communications have contained matter which the editor has felt forced to "censor." The editor does not enjoy the role of "censor"—he has troubles enough of his own. Some articles have needed so much "censoring" that they have been badly thrown in the waste-basket, much to the regret of the writer, and probably to the regret of the writer, too.

Correspondents are invited to air their views in the columns of the Courier. But they are requested not to take advantage of the security offered by the printed page, and are respectfully asked not to make statements which they would hesitate to make if talking in the presence of the person whom they may be discussing. One of our correspondents will notice that his estimation of the character of the late Chief Justice John Marshall was removed last week by the editor of the Courier. John Marshall is dead now, he has been dead quite a long time; but the majority of the people of the United States look upon his life-work as being one of the finest things of American citizenship has produced. For that reason the editor of this paper, who believes, as do other Americans, was constrained to "cut" the views of the writer regarding the entrepreneur of the Constitution.

Express your views freely and openly when you write to the Courier, but be as liberal in your language as you would like to have people in their estimation of yourself. Then the Courier will welcome you to its columns. But do not try to vent personal spleen in your letters, for the columns of this paper are not designed to enable folks to unjustly attack other people. This is an American newspaper, it has American ideals and American tolerance of the ideas of the people, and it believes in fair play. But that is as far as it goes.

SANE MANAGEMENT

Proof of the benefits of "sane conservation" under the Wilson administration is to be found in the report of the Forestry Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. Use of the national forests has been permitted whenever possible under the sanity of democratic control, and the faithful conservation of Pinchot and his cohorts has been supplanted by a reasonable appreciation of the great woods of the United States.

During the fiscal year just ended there was turned into the national treasury from the forests under federal control two and a half million dollars, and increase of $40,000 over the receipts of the previous year. This gain was made in spite of the low lumber prices offered, and in spite of the demoralization of allied trades by war. It is proof of the fact that sense in administering the affairs of the national forests pays well, both financially and in the benefit to the forests themselves.

Timber sales, which amounted to $1,164,000, yielded on account of the depressed condition of the lumber industry about $79,000 less than those of the previous fiscal year, but the gain was made possible by larger revenues from other sources. The grazing receipts, which totaled $1,125,000, increased $127,000 over last year, and the water power receipts, which amounted to not quite $90,000, showed an increase of nearly $42,000.

The demoralization of the turpentine industry on account of the war's curtailment of the naval stores market caused the receipts from the sale of turpentine privileges on the National Forests to drop about $9,000 as against nearly $15,000 last year. The sale of special use permits, under which all sorts of enterprises, from apiaries to whaling stations, are operated on the Forests, yielded nearly $78,000, an increase of $9,000 over last year. There was a decrease of nearly $37,000 in the revenue derived by the settlement of trespass cases in which Government timber had been cut without intent to defraud, the revenue from this source being only a little more than $3,000. More than $7,000, however, was collected from other timber trespass cases. Grazing trespass cases yielded nearly $6,000, an increase of about $1,000; occupancy trespass cases, which occurred in only one of the seven forest districts, turned in something less than $250; about $60 was derived from turpentine trespass cases, and $660 from fire trespass cases, the latter being more than $7,000 less than the amount collected in the previous fiscal year for damage to Government property through fires care-pavement for $1.10 per square yard. Which would make it appear that the Warrens were looking for an unreasonable profit.

The same number of the Building Record also has a brief announcement to the effect that the Standard Paving company, of 627 Pittock block, Portland, was about ready to lay 14,000 yards of asphaltic concrete in Oregon City. That is probably correct—but what happened to the Worswick Paving company, that was supposed to have received the contract? Did it change its name, or did it farm the contract out. And if it farmed it out, what is it paying the Standard company to do the work for?

HOME TO ROOST

One of the Willamette Valley papers last week contained the following:

"Oregon City's fire department . . . served notice that if its work was not enough appreciated to merit contributions from the business men to help it defray the expenses of the big tournament it would disband."

Similar comment upon municipal unpleasantness was to be found in other papers. Oregon City's business men must enjoy knowing that they were thus advertised. They got this notoriety because local correspondents of Portland papers sent out enthusiastic accounts of the way which the Live Wires and the Commercial Club had failed to get assistance for the firemen. Thus throughout the state Oregon City business men were branded as stingy and so exceedingly penurious that they wouldn't help their own firefighters get up an "entertainment fund" for visitors to the city.

It was a peculiar situation, all them. They are well worth reading and considering:

The trouble with the rich Willamette valley country is that too much money goes out and stays out.

Very few banks are increasing their deposits, and a lot of them are decreasing.

Automobile buying is sending a steady stream of gold out of this valley—and it doesn't come back, and there are a thousand other means of keeping the money of this section going everlastingly east—but eastern concerns not only make the most of what we produce, but they own the most of our lighting plants, railroads, water powers etc.

We ought to come alive and take what means we have to keep our money at home.

We ought to commence locally. We ought to pave our own street, light our own city, do our own building and produce more of our own stone, brick, cement blocks, tile, etc.

We could keep hundreds of thousands of dollars in Corvallis every year that now bids us good-bye.

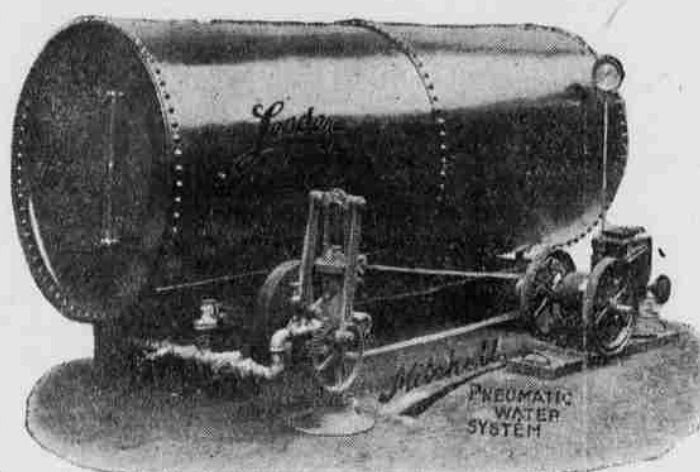

We would have far more employment for our workers and far better business conditions for our city if we would come alive and stop these drains of our cash.

Corvallis could organize a fire insurance company (for Corvallis alone) and keep every last dollar of the great insurance premiums that monthly chase back to New York and stay there, and not only keep this money at home, but save property owners a lot of money.

You'll say this is an improbable one and "can't be done." But it CAN.

There are many ways in which we could wonderfully help ourselves and our business, if we would.

ABOUT PAVING

The Oregon Building Record, of Portland, last week contained some interesting information for county seat and other taxpayers who are interested in paving streets and highways with hard surface. Bids were opened in Portland for paving a portion of Washington street, and figures submitted ran from $4 to $14.1 per square yard. The contract for the work was let to the Oregon Independent Paving company for asphalt at 84 cents per square yard.

Asphalt is good pavement. It is the most popular hard surface pavement in the world. New York uses it exclusively, even on Broadway, where traffic is so heavy that it is continuous for 24 hours a day. And it wears. If asphalt can be laid in Portland for 84 cents a square yard, isn't it remarkable that councilmen and county commissioners bent on saving money for the taxpayers should award bids for paving at figures in excess of this?

In the same bidding, the Warren Construction company offered to lay bitulithic at $14.1 per square yard. Bids on the same pavement were submitted by Oscar Huber, who offered to put down the patented Warren things considered. The visitors who will come here will spend their money with Oregon City businessmen. The crowds who will witness the firemen's tournament will spend their money in local stores. Local business will profit by the gathering more than will the firemen—yet local businessmen couldn't put up a bit of "side money" until the firemen and a committee of the councilmen went out and practically forced them to come through.

It was a peculiar situation, and one that should not have arisen. The fact that local business houses later put up approximately $800 for the firemen makes it appear that some one started the story for his own personal advertisement—yet the merchants got the benefit (?) of the unpleasant advertisement in the first place. It would appear that by now the harm is done, and cannot be remedied.

Yet the Courier can see where local businessmen in "standing on the necks" of the correspondents who sent out the first story.

IT GOES HERE TOO

The Benton County Courier of last week contained the following remarks, and they apply here with just as much force as they do in Corvallis, so we are tickled to death to reprint

CHRISTIANITY?

People advise the young to go to church. They say that in church things that are good will be learned. People also tell older folk to go to church. They say that church has a refining influence.

And the churches get together every now and then and hire Billy Sunday to come and hold revival services. They do this so that their attendance records may be bolstered up, and so that more people will join the church and receive its refining and elevating influence.

And here is a sample of the stuff that Billy Sunday hands out to refine and elevate people who go to church. This is what he said of a certain historical character:

"Pilate was a lick-spittle, low down, free-lunch, how-pouched, pliable, plastic, ward-heeling, whiskey-soaked, graft politician of his day."

Is this Christianity, and what the churches stand for?

FOR BUSINESSMEN

The mail order house of Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, a concern which next to the Ford Motor Company, disbursed the largest dividends in the country, is going after Oregon business hard. Two car loads of their catalogues have just arrived at Roseburg to be mailed there by parcel post to people living in the several counties of southern Oregon. They began this plan last year in order to take advantage of the zone system of parcel post charges. There is no question but the large mail order houses are making business dull for the merchants of many small towns, and by draining the country of money retarding its advancement, but it does little good to preach against the mail order evil. They go out after the trade and get it, quite frequently because the home merchant is too sleepy even to advertise in his local paper. The people of his community do not actually know his stock or the prices he puts upon his goods because he fills his shelves and warehouses and expects people to come and look for what they want. The mail order houses and city department stores go out to the people with the message of the bargains they have to offer in the newspapers, or through catalogues, and they keep everlastingly at it. Too many local merchants set down and kick over conditions brought about by the big city competition instead of going out and trying to remedy conditions by getting the right kind of goods at the right prices and making that fact known through approved methods of advertising.—Salem Statesman.

Wolf Howls

Truth will out. Southern Pacific press agent material sent to the Courier during the past week gloats upon the record for safety made by the road. Part of the gloat says that the Southern Pacific "operated 52,000 passenger trains every month or 64,000 during the year." Probably one set of these figures is correct; but we would like to know which set the press agent imagined.

In the same envelope came also a spasm about steel passenger coaches. It says, in part: "The first steel passenger car ever built in the United States is on display in the Southern Pacific's exhibit" at the Fisco fair. We wonder why it was taken out of the service? Continuing, the press agent remarks that the S. P. has 5156 steel cars "of all descriptions," and that the "main line coaches are 60 feet long and seat 72 persons." Railroad men call them "tin-can cars," but the press agent neglects to mention that fact. People who have ridden in all-steel coaches on the Milwaukee, Northern Pacific or Pennsylvania lines will readily see why.
