

THE FASHIONS

New York, August 16, 1915.

Did it ever occur to you that the width of your skirt and the line of your frock had much to do with the grace of your carriage and the evenness of your disposition? That we should hop awkwardly or glide gracefully, with the whim of Fashion seems somewhat ridiculous, but such is the case. We cannot walk well or gracefully when skirts are tight. Luxuries are scarce in Paris just now—motors are doing war service; the Parisienne must walk or stay at home. She prefers to walk, and as she absolutely refuses to be ungraceful, the wide skirt has come back into favor. This was probably the first excuse for the change. We in America who have always loved the exercise of walking find the change grateful, too, and are not slow to accept taffeta turban is still popular for mornings, and the medium sized hat, with slightly mushroomed brim, with or without a hanging fold of maline or crepe, is liked by many. One may safely wear the hat that is most becoming with no misgivings.

A Princess Coat Dress of Linen

There is no doubt of the popularity of the Peinence; it will be a favored model for the first serge frocks of early fall, and is already appearing in linen and now then in taffeta. I saw an unusually smart one the other afternoon on the Avenue. It was of dark-blue linen with striped collar, and was held in a trifle at the waistline, with one of the new softly colored suede belts now modish. The hat was a sailor with a dark-blue satin brim well set up, bandeau fashion, on a straw crown. The skirt was amply full and the wearer, who also had a dog on a leash, was able to stride comfortably beside the sturdy "Patrick."

It is now the day of the pedestrian, freedom of feet and open air. What if Fashion is threatening—"hoop skirts next"—let us enjoy life while we may!

It's never too late for something new, if that something is fashion. It would seem that advanced summer is as opportune a time for launching styles as early spring, if one may judge from this season. Every time society congregates for sports there is something new in the way of fashion. It is one of their pastimes and

A Word or Two on Footwear

You tell them about hats and frocks, suits and petticoats, but you hardly ever say a word about shoes, a shoe man complained to me some days ago. However, we must say something about shoes this season, the shorter skirts demand it. There is quite as strict a code of etiquette for shoes as there is for gloves or hats, but few of us follow it. For morning wear, with the walking suit or skirt, a slightly higher topped shoe, with straight Cuban heel and a rather substantial sole is correct this season; these may be tan or black. Tan shoes, either buttoned or laced, are especially effective with the new tweeds and checks. For afternoon with the frock of taffeta, faille, and like materials, the modified French, or as they are named, the Spanish Louis heels, are correct on a high or half shoe of patent leather or plain calf skin. For evening, of course, the French heel is most effective on a slipper of bronze, patent leather, or in a brocade to match the gown.

The Hat of the Hour

Small, large, and medium hats are all in good style. The wide flat sailor of Georgette, is a general favorite just now. They are made up in a soft crepe de Chine, white or mastic, one of the new grays, or with brim of dark-blue or black satin, and crown of straw or velvet. The small which matched a jumper of the same material, and was worn over a guimpe of transparent white Swiss. The trimming was, of course, cretonne, for no dress is quite complete without it this summer, but this time it had forsaken its gay colorings and flowers in favor of a black-and-white check. To say that bands and facings of this material on the white were startling is putting it mildly, but, then, the points of the skirt were striking enough to carry off a contrast of this kind.

Hats Now Match the Wash Dresses
This is a season when every dress has a hat of its own, matching either the material or the trimming; Miss Post's hat followed the rule, being made of the black-and-white cretonne. In its straight-brimmed sailor style, low of crown and tilted fearlessly on the head, it had a swagger style in keeping with the sport of airmen.

Stockings Checked Likewise
What hats may do, stockings may do likewise. Even if they were not of cretonne, they had its checks and matched the facing, the trimming, and the hat, giving a certain complete-

Braid a Trimming for Silk Frocks

Many of the older women and some of the young girls, too, wore the silk dresses of faille and taffeta. These were mostly of the new Princess or coat styles. Braid is much in evidence as trimming. Wide Hercules braid was repeated in several models in graduated rows on the bottom of the skirts. One model of Hickson's had braid as wide as five inches. It is rumored that another tailor has ordered it eighteen inches wide; but, then, this is rumor and time alone will tell whether we will wear it or not.

Mme. Lanvin Introduces the Sword-Cord

The sword-cord was the feature of one of the non-militant taffeta dresses worn by a woman prominent in New York society. So modest was the dress, with its tight basque and full skirt of blue taffeta, that the cord without the sword lost its military aspect. Mme. Lanvin is responsible for the sword-cord on silk dresses, having shown it earlier in the season on several taffetas. Now it takes on various forms and has been made in a frog-like ornament for the side of the new coats.

Turbans Gain in Smartness

It is interesting to note that wherever this glint of the military is seen the hat is small. This particular model worn with the costume mentioned above was small and close-fitting to the extreme, topped with a fan-tailed pigeon. Bows and pliant wings are also employed on the tops of these turbans, for the turban must have something high to give it chic. But, when it has its bow, its wing, or its bird properly perched there is something in its style unexcelled by the larger-brimmed hats.

Small Boys' Suits from Marine Sources

The children play an important role at these daytime fetes. Boys are especially smart in their suits, taken, as they are, from the army and navy uniforms—trimming, brass buttons and all. One little chap who was keenly interested in watching his father maneuver a big biplane, wore a white duck suit cut on the lines of the sailor uniform, with long, flare trousers, sailor blouse, and wide collar. It is surprising how popular these suits have suddenly become for the younger children. Many of the shops are featuring the suit this little chap wore, cleverly naming it the "submarine." Whether the name catches the mother or the child is hard to tell.

Style Influenced by Occupation

Both mother and child seem to have gone in for the extreme just at present now that aviation and like sports are uppermost in mind. When they again return to their charities in the fall we may expect a reverse swing in the pendulum of fashion.

THATCHER HITS SNAG

Portland "Criminologist" Denied Financial Aid in "Case"

George P. Thatcher, Portland's "criminologist" who has "positive evidence" in regard to the Hill murders at Ardenwald—and who has had "positive evidence" before—bumped the bumps last week with the county court, when he sent a representative to Oregon City to request "financial assistance" from District Attorney Hedges, so that he could investigate the case further. Mr. Hedges took Thatcher's representative to the county court; and the county court figured out that Thatcher would have to "go it alone."

The county court recently paid one Leavings, of Portland, $2,000, for "working on the case" of the Hill murders, and it doesn't feel like paying any more money out until it gets something.

At Thatcher's request Milwaukee officers arrested Frederick Alexander, and had him bound over to the grand jury for investigation in connection with the Ardenwald tragedy. Alexander was in custody for this purpose once before, and was found by expert detectives and police officers to have nothing to do with the horrible crime that shocked the whole Northwest some years ago. He was found mentally unbalanced, however, and was sent to the state asylum at Salem for awhile.

Thatcher says he has "positive evidence" to connect Alexander with the crime, but so far he has been very shy about submitting this evidence to the authorities. Thatcher has a number of "private detectives" working with him on the case, and they have boasted in regard to a number of "clues." One of these "clues" is said to have to do with the alleged disappearance of legal papers from the county clerk's office. Aside from Thatcher and his aides, nobody is taking Thatcher's latest "hunch" very seriously.

BONDS TURNED BACK

Highschool Issue Transferred to Second Bidder by Board

The Portland firm that bid $300 premium and accrued interest for the $20,000 worth of bonds issued by the Oregon City school board to provide an addition to the present high-school, changed its mind after looking over the securities; and last week informed the local school board that it didn't care for the stuff.

The school board thereupon transferred the sale of the bonds to Sweet, Causey & Foster, of Denver, who bid $175 and interest for the issue. This firm has already purchased $375,000 of South Fork Water commission bonds, and seems to be favorably impressed with Oregon City securities.
