GARFIELD CLUB MAKES SUCCESS

promoting association that leads to comparison and new ideals. It has united the people of the neighborhood into a more homogenous group by making common many of the purposes and methods of social activities. It has resulted in the organization of musical associations that have evolved both an orchestra and a band, many members of which two or three years ago knew nothing of music or ever hoped to know anything of it. It has resulted in bringing to the district a number of most desirable citizens of social culture and with means to aid in developing the country. It has provided a nucleus of capable persons that are in a position to extend the hospitality of the community to community guests.

It has fostered the spirit of organization and cooperation until it is much easier to organize for special purposes. An instance of this is seen in the organization this summer of a marketing association, which, through its market master, Stephen Preneck, has sold in the Portland public market more than one thousand dollars' worth of produce, much of which would have otherwise remained unsold, and returned to producers eight hundred dollars of that sum. To these advantages must be added the more subtle ones of rural uplift and child inspiration, which constitute a force that will operate through generations to come.

Lastly, it has blazed the way for organizing community life in the state's rural districts, a way already followed successfully by at least one other community near by and doubtless to be followed by many others throughout the state.

tion of Oregon City and Oswego, which get 60 percent of their road taxes, up until May 23 of this year the incorporated towns were only entitled to 50 percent of the road funds—and since that date they have been entitled to 70 percent. The county court is now facing the joyful prospect of making the incorporated towns "blow back" with the 15-2-3 too much that they got before the May date, and in "coming through" itself with the excess due under the law since then.

But out of all this assorted tangle, the outlook is for a drastic remodeling of road business in this county; and as any change at all will be for the better, the taxpayers and residents have much to be thankful for. It is to be hoped that before long a systematic class of road improvement will be undertaken, and that with better roads, Clackamas county will come into its destiny. This county ought to be the best county in which to live in the whole Willamette valley—and it will be that just as soon as it has roads that can be used.

MERRY CREW VISITORS to the barn. Mr. Rickert operates a car for the Portland Taxicab company.

Arriving in Oregon City the party paused in front of the county courthouse, right opposite the windows of the sheriff's office, while two of the members went in search of a butchers where they might buy some meat. While waiting for the other purchasers to do their errand, the remaining boys thought the time auspicious for a little refreshment, so they hauled forth two bottles of beer and started cooling themselves with the amber beverage.

This demonstration of "down with drink" was quite a shock to the sensibilities of Oregon City, which is a nice and "dry" town, with the next year state prohibition law already in effect, and as a result a crowd gathered to watch the "putting down of drink." In the crowd, among others, were the Rev. Erastus Smith and Rev. W. T. Milliken. Both ministers, as well as sundry citizens, looked in all directions for the police force, or even for attaches of the sheriff's office. Somebody did tell Chief Deputy Hackett about it, and Mr. Hackett took one horrified look out of the window and then began a frantic telephoning for the minions of the city law. The sheriff's office doesn't like to interfere in municipal matters, be it known—Mr. Wilson, who works in the sheriff's office with Mr. Hackett has even said as much when alibi-ing on the Milwaukee dives.

While Mr. Hackett was doing his best to summon the police, ex-sheriff Mass wandered into the mayor's drugstore, and told the mayor about it. The Mayor deputized Mr. Mass as a special city cop, and the former sheriff started for the scene of festivity. Before he had reached there, however, Deputy Sheriff Miles, taking legal advice from Judge Campbell, decided that he had power to act, and hauled along side the deeply laden touring car and piloted it to the city jail. Mr. Miles did not have a key to the jail, and while a large crowd gathered he and the occupants of the touring car entered into a discussion of the cause of the excitement. In the midst of this Mr. Wilson appeared on the scene, with a pass-key to the jail, and the merry party was ushered into the city bastle and booked.

Then arrived Acting Chief of Police Henry Cook, City Recorder John Loder, City Attorney Schuebel, Special Policeman (just deputized) Ernest Mass, and newspapermen. Shortly afterwards arrived also Chief of Police Ed Shaw, suddenly returned from his vacation. Mr. Shaw had with him one of the missing members of the party, and Mr. Wilson shortly went out and got the other one.

City Recorder Loder fixed bail at $25 all round, with the exception of Rickert, the chauffeur, who was let off with ten dollars; and the proceedings then adjourned until Monday morning in the recorder's court, when punishment was meted out.

Taken altogether, the even was the liveliest thing that happened in the county seat Saturday afternoon, and drew an audience all told of about 250 people; all of whom mentioned the fact that "if we are going to have a dry town, we might as well have it dry."

MANY GREET COUPLE

G. A. R. "Recognition pins" were presented to the happy couple by Mr. and Mrs. Clyde, of the Post; and Captain McGowan, who was Mr. Beach's commander during war times, also attended to extend his felicitations. Mrs. George A. Harding gave a short talk, congratulating the couple on their many years of happy wedded life, and conveying the best wishes of the old soldiers and those associated with them.

An enjoyable dinner was served upon the lawn in front of the Beach home, and many tokens from friends were received during the day. The Beach family has been extremely fortunate, death so far not having visited it. Owing to this the Beach family comprises four children, thirteen grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Mr. Beach is hale and hearty at 77 years of age, and his wife is 68.

Those present at the golden wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. Webster, Miss Nora Webster, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Harding, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Clyde, Mr. and Mrs. John Ackley, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. H. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Martin, Mrs. Hobbie, Mrs. Clara Moore, Mrs. Clarence Frost, Mrs. Catherine Walters, Mrs. Pauline Schwartz, Mr. Gorbett, Mr. Mount, Mr. Tufts, Mr. Theodore Kellogg, of Portland; Captain Kelly, Captain McGowan, Mr. Doremus, W. H. McClellan, Mrs. Minnie Donovan, Mrs. Christianson, W. Rollins, Mrs. T. E. Barnard and son, Don; Mrs. Mary E. Barlow, Mrs. N. M. HOW ABOUT THIS?

In addition to this the wireless telegraph has been perfected to such an extent that it is a serious competitor of the old wire lines; and progress being made in wireless telephony makes it appear as if it would not be long before the old style, wait-for-central telephone would be in the discard, too. The government already has a monopoly of wireless telegraph work—so of course the old wire companies would like to unload their antiquated and inadequate plants on the people of the United States and let the government pay them two or three billion dollars for the junk.

So they probably framed it with the Industrial Relations Committee to recommend the purchase of this old concerns. That is the way our paternal government gets bunced by these commissions all the time.

It seems to me that it would be better for the government to keep the two or three billion dollars that the old wire companies would like to have, and expend this sum in putting in a system of wireless telegraph, which could be utilized both by the government and by the people—as are the government wireless systems now in Alaska and the Philippines. Then the people would get the benefit of the billions spent, and would have a modern and up-to-date service at reasonable rates—and the old busted-down companies could be forced to a show-down. I don't believe in making the government the goat for the out-of-date wire concerns, and I think that somebody ought to take this matter up in Congress and see that the "steal" isn't put over.

As it is now, under the guise of "public ownership," the plan looks to me like simply giving the old companies a few more big dividends at the expense of the people.

the contract, that the State can't buy it unless it violates the same contract that we have been fighting for years? Come now, it may look tough to give the toiler a piece of land that belongs to him, but, Brother Schuebel, hold up your head—gaze into the sky and say, by the help of God I am for once going to try and give the poor man what actually belongs to him, for $2.50 per acre and not skim the timber off first.

I have more to say but have not time this morning.

"WAR TRUST" PAYS

Congressman Tavenner Tells How Great Profits Are Made

Discussing the need of a federal plant in which armour, ammunition and other munitions of war might be manufactured for the government, Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner recently uncovered the following interesting facts, of which he says:

"Army and Navy officers who do the purchasing of war munitions and who are paid a salary by the people and are trusted by the people to see that the Government receives a dollar's worth of material for every dollar expended, have permitted a ring of ammunition manufacturers to outrageously overcharge Uncle Sam for armor, guns, powder and munitions in general.

"For instance, the War Department in 1913 purchased seven thousand 4.7-inch shrapnel from the ammunition ring, paying $25.26 each therefor. At the same time precisely the same shrapnel was being manufactured in the Government-owned Frankford Arsenal for $15.45 all overhead charges included.

"This instance is not the exception, it is the rule. The Army and Navy officers in 20 years have purchased $175,000,000 worth of armor, armament, and munitions from four firms, which have a monopoly in this country on the manufacture of such supplies and have paid this grasping war trust from 20 to 60 percent more than the same articles could have been manufactured for in the Government plants.

"The American people have never been let into the secret of who the profit makers are in the traffic of war and preparation for war in this country, and the methods by which they help themselves at the public trough. I will go further and venture the assertion that not 30 members of Congress know the identity of the select ring of patriots for profit into whose pockets the millions of the masses are pouring, which gentlemen have a water-tight monopoly in this country on the traffic of war trading, and who have drawn down every penny of $50,000,000 in excessive and extortionate profits from the Government by direct virtue of their influential friends in the Army, the Navy, and in Congress. Lest any gentlemen in high places should resent the implication of being friends of the War Trust, I hasten at the outset to concede that they are patriots; yes, all of them.

"The Secretary of the Navy can try as he will to get some one to underbid the armor ring, either in this country or abroad, and he will not be able to escape the net; he has tried and has not been able to escape it.

"Armor, armament, and ammunition contractors are not big enough fools to cut each other's throats. Their business is to supply for a gigantic profit the wherewithal for the peoples of the earth to enjoy a monopoly of throat cutting and the pulling of limb from limb. As for themselves, they do not indulge in price-cutting warfare. Their game is purely profit making. They start the ball rolling by making nations distrustful of one another, and then in inducing them to over-prepare for war. Does anyone doubt that if the European nations had not been so over-prepared for war they would have been so willing to have entered into it?"

price asked by the old companies for their equipment was too high. Antagonism of two of the old companies to the Bull Run supply also helped in making sentiment against them.

Work on completing Milwaukee's Bull Run system has been tied up frequently in the courts, by injunctions obtained by two of the old water concerns; but it is believed that following the vote of the people at Saturday's election the owners of these "insurgent" water companies will realize that public sentiment is strongly against them, and will withdraw their suits to balk the Bull Run plans.

ABOUT PORTLAND

Inside Information from Tourist Agent Answers Papers

Portland papers recently, under inspiration of the Chamber of Commerce, threw several fits about the way tourists were "passing up the city;" and regretted that "something" couldn't be done to halt, for Portland's benefit, the stream of tourists that are passing through the Northwest on their way to the California expositions. This week there was a party of 85 tourists that flitted thru Portland on Sunday, and the conductor of the party happened to talk more or less confidentially to a newspaperman.

"We always try to bring our parties into Portland on Sunday," he said. "Tourist agencies are in the business to make money, you know, and while we figure on giving our parties all that they are entitled to, we don't figure on giving them any more. So we try to make Portland on Sunday, and only stop during the day. We get in from Puget Sound on a night train, get our people to a hotel for breakfast, and then tell them they can have the morning for religious worship. In the afternoon we take them on the cars to Council Crest, and along Portland heights, and after an early evening dinner we pile them on to a train for California.

"We do this for two reasons; first, because Portland hasn't really got anything for tourists to see; and secondly, because if we were to plan to take them up the Columbia the taxicab and omnibus companies would gouge the life out of us for hauling them. Portland, in fact, is a 'gouge town' when it comes to large parties of tourists; and they want to get all our money and give us nothing in return.

"In the Sound country there is a different spirit and different conditions. There is the Mt. Rainier trip to be made, which can be handled on railroad fares all the way, and the trip from Seattle to Bremerton or Snoqualmie Falls can be made without our being held up. In Tacoma we can show the tourists the greatest docks and terminals in the world and then take them out to the Point Defiance park and military reservation all for streetcar fares; and if we miss anything, the Chamber of Commerce is only too glad to take a hand and show our people the other sights.

"But here in Portland there are all sorts of people trying to hold us up all the time; and then on top of that Portland hasn't got anything for tourists to see—that is, Portland hasn't got anything that the other Coast cities haven't got in much better and

Superintendent of Filter Plant Sees New Mountain Supply

W. H. Howell, superintendent of Oregon City's filter plant, through which the municipality's present water supply is passed before it goes to consumers, was one of a party who this week made a trip of inspection over the new South Fork pipeline, that will bring melted snow to the county seat for drinking purposes after the fall of this year. On his return Mr. Howell was interviewed by local newspapermen to the following effect.

"What did you think of the new water supply, Mr. Howell?"

"Well, boys, I saw some of the finest scenery up there that I've ever set eyes on. There is one fall about 500 yards above the upper dam that is pretty near as good as Multnomah Falls. It must be 125 feet high, and—"

"Yes, but how about the water?"

"And I think the contractors are surely doing a creditable job for the city. In fact I'd like to find the time to take a walk over the whole pipeline and see how the work—"

"Sure you would, Bill; but what did you think of the water?"

"Our party went in by way of Springwater ridge, and hit the canyon from the top of a mountain that must be a thousand feet high. There was only a little narrow path down to the river, and—"

"Say, Mr. Howell, what did you think of the water?"

"Oh, the water?" Well, a majority of the voters of Oregon City expressed a preference for it, didn't they? So it must be all right. It was sure a nice trip we—"

"What did YOU think of the water, Bill?"

"Oh, what did I think? Well, it tasted good and cool after climbing up there, and I guess its all right."

WATER HELPS SPUDS

Irrigation in Dry Weather Will Greatly Aid Crop

That it pays to irrigate potatoes when summer rainfall is scant is shown by experiments conducted by F. C. Reimer, superintendent of the Southern Oregon Experiment Station at Taft. Eight leading varieties were grown in as many rows and one half of each row was irrigated, the other half not, but cultivated and sprayed in otherwise precisely the same way. When the potatoes were harvested and weighed it was found that the yield of the irrigated half was three times that of the unirrigated. The quality was equally good.

Don't Tell All You Know.

The little daughter of the hostess looked long and inquiringly at the guest who she had been told was a very learned man and a professor. During a full in the conversation she spoke up.

"What do you do in college, please, sir?"

"I am a professor, my dear," was the reply. "I impart my knowledge to the students."

"Then if you keep on that way," she said soberly, "pretty soon you won't know anything yourself, will you?"—Ladies' Home Journal.

more interesting form. This stuff about tourists passing up Portland makes me tired—they force us to pass them up by the way they try to gouge us for nothing."
