

JOHN STARK'S IDEAS

What has become of "Kitty"? Did she go to the fair and lose her return transportation, or has she gone to the sea shore and been eaten by sharks? I wonder!

Judge Gatens of Portland, is liable to chuck his judicial dunc cap into the ash barrel some of these days. No doubt you are aware that Amma Goldman is trying to rock the political boat and capsize the government; well, she and her manager were fined $100 for circulating information that should be in every household, to judge from reports. Upon appeal to Gatens' court the case was dismissed. It is generally considered obscene to inform the workers along the lines in common everyday use among the masters, hence the arrest. It also shows that the courts are all infallible and the laws are plain, so there is no chance for us workers to err from lack of understanding.

Within the past few weeks a new patriotic stunt is being pulled off by the "business men" and our best people in general to spend their vacations playing "sojer-boy." It would seem a nice start is made to get a vacation at public expense on pretense of preparing to repulse the foreigner when he comes to carry away our lakes and mountains. I wonder if a large quantity of booze will not be fired down the throats of these patriots and charged up to us as "ammunition." I sort-of think it should be popular in Oregon when the twenty-four quart limit is reached in August.

In case of war I shall do all I can to send these patriots up in front, where the buzzard bait is manufactured. I'll bet a corner lot in New Jerusalem that this crowd will be just too eager for that glory.

The high priests of bunk are burning a lot of incense at the altar of one Benson, whom they have denominated the first grand prize of Multnomah, or some similar "eeze mark" title. Without looking up his biography or his rating in Bradstreets it would seem time was firmly taken by the forelock to make him jar loose before the corrupt practices act becomes effective in his case. Of course I have not seen it stated that he would like to find a seat in our American house of Lords, but the suspicion is aroused by the goings on. Perhaps this man Benson has been diligently gathering up some shekels and a large and admiring throng would gladly polish them by handing. It is quite likely that he will furnish wine to heat fools and meat to fill knaves, but it is unlikely that he will ever become a second Timon of Athens in wisdom. Perhaps Booth, Selling and Calk will assist at the incense business just to relieve an old sore.

A local attorney informs us that the prohibition law, passed by the late and lamented legislature is a swindle. Just why it takes two columns to tell us what every grown person must have known must be charged up to the hot weather. This law was passed in winter, so our wise 'uns that that twenty-four quarts of beer every four weeks would be a plenty. Had they been in session during this hot weather they no doubt would have made it that amount per day, or one quart per hour, which would seem to make this a pretty nice word to hang to. Life would have been worth while. If that learned deciple of Blackstone will look the field over and find a law that is not a swindle it would seem soon enough to get up on the judicial dunc heap and make a loud cackle. Were all the useless laws torn out of the book what excuse could he offer for taking grub from the social platter? Surely there would not be enough left between the covers to permit the Court's devil to roll a coffin nail.

I had an invitation to contribute toward building another shanty for God, but I declined on the ground that there were too many already in the city. The solicitor was a courteous dame, whose skin was a few shades darker than my own. She politely told me that white people did not like to mix with color. I told her that I would cheerfully join a mob to make kindling wood out of any building called a church that refused them entry or to give them an unoccupied date for a meeting of their own. Perhaps my christian brethren will take umbrage at my suggested solution. I look at it this way: if there is to be a grand reunion on the evergreen shore, we had better get the habit of association right away, or there is liable to be a hot time in New Jerusalem when Gabriel sounds his trumpet in the morning. If we are going to mutiny on the journey toward that calm and quiet shore simply over a question of shading of our cuticle it were best we take passage toward divergent harbors. Just what trade mark this particular religious breakfast food sold under I did not inquire into, but I suppose it was supplied to our dark brethren by the white race under our strict guarantee as to it being the real thing.

The tragic death of Leo M. Frank gave many a newspaper a chance to bewilder their readers with a lot of inconsistencies, if not hypocrisy. Where is the difference between death by a "mob," or cold-blooded death by a judge, jury and sheriff, with a canting clergyman? Or say the fury of a battle for the flag or the nation's honor? In either case death is violent. There is a lot of rot printed about the disgrace the state of Georgia is fallen heir to in this gruesome episode. All political government rests upon the basic principle of murder. In fact murder is the chief industry of government as we know that institution to day.

It is reported that Frank was a Jew, and for this reason was the object of hatred. That this fact was regarded as more important than the evidence which was brought against him. In that case these persons were showing their patriotism, which, we are told, is the noblest quality of citizenry. Frank was unfortunate in not being a southern gentleman, sah! Then he would have been safe.

It is to the retiring governor's credit that he made a decent show to save his life so far as it lay in his power. It also shows that governments cannot protect life as we so frequently told by people who believe the fables and fiction of childhood in preference to the facts about them in every day life. Nevertheless about a hundred million parrots will constantly assert that it does. On the whole it seems our best people were the perpetrators of this outrage upon human life. Now what is to be done about it?

JOHN F. STARK.

The Summery Girl

A quiet resort of the summery sort is where I am longing to be. Where girls with bright glances are seeking romances.

And cool woods would beckon to me, Where roaming and boating and swimming and floating. Formally put out of curl, And set in the heart of the summery sort Of summer resort girl.

I've tried every jolly and dangerous folly The prodigal city affords. I've toyed to satiety with each variety Of the bait served us on words; And none of it thrills me—with ennui it fills me.

And yet I'd get all in a whirr! Could I ramble apart at some summer resort With a summery sort of girl.

Oh, dull may things grow at the garden or show And unspeakably dull at the club! You may note streaks of gray, feel you're getting passe, And sigh you're no longer a cub. But just take to the woods, run away from your moods, And you'll soon frisk about like a quail!

When a-strolling you start at a summer resort With a summery sort of girl.

—Lee Shippey in Judge.

FARMERS FROM BELGIUM ARE WANTED IN SOUTH.

Colonies Established Already in Georgia and North Carolina.

At an immigration conference in Savannah, Ga., one of the principal questions was that of methods of encouraging Belgian farmers to locate in Georgia.

This is not the beginning of such a movement in Georgia nor in the south. It was started several months ago, with the result that there are now several colonies of Belgian truck farmers in southern Georgia. Similar movements have been started in other states, notably in North Carolina, where there are one or two colonies of Belgians.

This demand for Belgians is due to two causes—first, the south entertains a profound sympathy for the Belgians in the plight the war has brought upon them; second, the great need of the south is for farmers, capable of doing intensified farming, to settle upon waste tracts of uncultivated farm lands in Dixie.

There are now in Georgia at least two concrete propositions which will be made to Belgians.

One is the settlement of a tract of some 1,700 acres of farm land in Lowndes county. Upon showing that families desiring to settle on this land are reliable people it is stated that all financial arrangements will be made for them, including transportation. Part of the land is wooded, and Belgians settling there will be paid for clearing this land. There is a community store, at which credit will be extended to those tilling lands on this tract. Options will be given on these lands at their present price. There is a similar plan for settling a large tract of land in Jones county, near Macon, where fifty farmhouses have already been built.

What the Trouble Was
A Mrs. Malaprop was overheard on a street car while telling a friend about the illness of an acquaintance. "I don't know just what the trouble is," she said, "but I believe there is something the matter with her spiral column. There is a veribrat out of place, or something of that sort. And it is apt to go hard with her, just getting over punony."

All Money Good in Canada.

There is no place in the world where money is under less supervision than in Canada. The coins in circulation there are not confined to the Dominion. British halfpennies and pennies circulate as freely as the cents, and United States coins of all descriptions are accepted as equal in value to the Canadian coins, though the United States refuses to handle the coins of the Dominion on its own side of the border. In the course of a busy day in Canada you are not surprised to meet coinage of many nations. Sometimes you get finds. A correspondent who is an amateur coin collector tells me he got among his change a beautiful specimen of a farthing of the reign of George III., and an hour or two afterward he became the possessor of an old Irish halfpenny over 100 years old, with the harp on one side. Probably these two coins had been carefully preserved, but poverty induced the proprietors to part with them.—London Chronicle.

Then There Was a Shakeup.

Some years ago the Italian minister of foreign affairs, Signor Prinetti, asked his majesty King Victor Emmanuel to sign a decree for the augmentation of the staff of the foreign office. The king promised to think the matter over and the next morning set out alone on foot to pay a visit to the office. Arriving at 9 o'clock, he found no one there. A long search unearthed a solitary clerk who was smoking cigarettes.

"What are the hours of this office?" asked the king.

"From 8 to 12," was the reply.

"And when may I expect to see your colleagues?"

"They generally turn up about 11."

"Very well. When your chief comes tell him the king has been here."

And then his majesty sent for Signor Prinetti and suggested that instead of asking for more clerks he should make it his business to see that those already on the staff attended to their duties.

The Inquisitive Japs.

The Japanese have a lively desire to know all about you. They are actively interested in your health, your business, your habits, your wealth, your personal affairs, how you like your eggs for breakfast, what your clothes cost, where you are going, when you are going and why you are going; what you intend to do after you get there, what your excuse for existing is, how often you get your hair cut, how many children you have or have not and why, what your watch cost, who is your tailor, how often you wash your teeth, how much you owe, whether you have any birthmarks and what was the occupation of your grandfather. These and all other topics that are personal to you they are anxious to discover. Their curiosity is unbounded; but, my sakes, how polite they are about it!—Samuel G. Blythe in Saturday Evening Post.

Hunting Trouble.

When a man just naturally wants trouble it is mighty easy to find an excuse for making it. According to Mike Hogan, Casey and O'Brien were having a personal argument of their own. It had progressed to the extent that each had forgotten what it was about originally, and they were wholly oblivious of the gathering crowd until an urbane and genteel person in a frock coat put in.

"Come, come, my man," he said, gently plucking Casey by the sleeve. "You don't want to fight. I can tell it by your looks. Your face is too benign."

"Two be nine! Two be nine, is it, ye scut?" bellowed Casey. "Me face is two be nine, is it?"

And there was where the real trouble began.—Louisville Times.

Longings.

A well known essayist and connoisseur of New York attended recently an artistic tea in Washington square.

Near artists of all sorts—near poets, near sculptors, near painters and near novelists—attended the tea. The ladies wore djiblahs of green burlap. The gentlemen wore sandals. The collation was vegetarian.

Looking calmly at that mass of freaks, he said, with a smile:

"Artistic longings consist invariably, it seems, of long hair, long teeth and long faces—everything but long purses, in fact."—Washington Star.

Trenches in War.

The Romans, who were the first to make war a real art (if one forgets a certain Alexander), were in consequence the first to use trenches. Their main line of entrenchment ran across southern Germany from the east bank of the Rhine to near the present Stuttgart.

Cynical.

"But be sure you're right," exclaimed the confident philosopher. "and then go ahead."

"Be sure you're right," protested the married man, "and then get down on your knees and ask to be forgiven."—Puck.

No Truth.

"They say diet has much to do with people's character."

"Nothing of the sort. I saw that sour Miss Tart the other day filling up on angel cake."—Baltimore American.

An Outdoor Sport.

"Why do you beat the rugs with a golf club?"

"It looks more like I was doing this for exercise and not under compulsion."—Kansas City Journal.

MORE ABOUT EXPERTS

Correspondent Discourses on Taxes, Pests and Other Things

Editor Courier: In a recent editorial, entitled "Penny Wise and Pound Foolish," some comments were made on a resolution passed at the August meeting of Maple Lane Grange in opposition to the appointment of an expert agriculturist for Clackamas county. As the author of that resolution and in answer to the editorial, please allow me space in your paper.

I am aware that the position I take will brand me as a foe to progress and expose me to the ridicule of a certain class, but that is always the fate of those who attempt to interfere or protest against the "Powers That Be." The reason given in the resolution for the opposition to it was expense and while that was a good and sufficient one, it was not the only one that could be urged.

Almost the first question that will be asked of one that protests against increased taxes will be: "How much is your assessment?" And it may be from $1,000 to $5,000. And you will get this: "Oh, that will cost you from 50 cents to $1.00. I don't think you should kick about that."

I have paid taxes on this little place of mine for 13 years and in 1914 I paid a little more than six times as much in taxes as I did in 1901. And what for? The roads do not show that per cent of improvement surely. Life and property are no more secure now than then. If I had $100,000 in my house today, and it was publicly known, it would not be as safe as it was then. I believe a large part of this increase in expense and taxation goes to support useless and extravagant commissions and supervisors, and promoters and grafters. I believe that this agricultural extension work can be classed somewhere in that list. Not as the worst or most expensive one, but bad enough.

It is said that we are paying from one-half to three-fourths of a million dollars a day for the support of agricultural colleges and extension work in the states alone. Say nothing about federal appropriations. The Lever Bill appropriates $1,000,000 the first year, two million the second and so on until the sum of five million is reached to be duplicated first by the states and then by the counties before it becomes available. Just look at the magnitude of the sum, and then try to realize that this is only a small part of one of the least of the vampire hand that is preying on us, and you won't wonder where our taxes go. And then realize too, who pays the bills. So much for expense. Now what about the value of some of the things we get for the money.

Just recently there was a farm demonstration train sent up through the valley. One of the attractions was the cunning demonstration by work of the O. A. C. professors, and one prominent feature of that was the analysis of the food value of certain weeds and how to can the same for food. Sour Dock, Poke weed, Lamb's Quarter, Milk weed, Pursley, etc. (I don't know as this would be considered an answer to the Courier's weed question, but it is along that line.) Now it seems a bit superfluous—that kind of knowledge—unless the professor had a kind of prophetic vision of what would happen to some of us if there was not a halt called soon.

About a year ago another professor issued a bulletin in regard to a worm, I think it was, that was about to destroy the fir trees if some radical means were not taken at once to prevent. But luckily, somewhere in his life history he had to get on an ash to complete the cycle of his existence, and as we have not heard from him lately let us hope he got lost in transit, for I don't know of an ash tree in this section. Now it is the elm tree beetle, but don't worry, Brother Farmer, they will get him alright, and if they did not we could stand it. The talk we hear of making two blades of grass grow where only one grew before is a little tiresome. If it were possible to do that with our present methods of distribution it would be the greatest calamity that could befall the country. The only reason that that kind of advice is of any value is that nine times out of ten it is not taken and the tenth time it won't work. We ought to have an expert horticulturist at a nice little salary to teach us to grow peaches—for peach week, you know.

I tell you all that is necessary to make the two blades of grass grow is a remunerative market and not expert advice. If it will pay the farmers will show you whether he knows how or not. You speak of the exceptionally disinterested and altruistic motives of these agricultural gentlemen. Once upon a time I was appointed fruit inspector of this county, and about that same time a certain sum was set aside for the purpose of paying the bills. Among the very first instructions I received from the commissioner of this district under whose instructions I was expected to work, was that whatever else I did be sure and get all that sum or we would not be able to get that sum next year. That principle explains the pathetic interest these colleg fellows take in us poor farmers.

There is a certain sum set aside for extension work and unless they get it all they may not get as much next time. Don't be deceived. "It is money they want." Now in conclusion let us remember that all economic disturbances begin with the penny. Interest is not received by the per cent. Morgan was to get less than two per cent for furnishing the allies with five hundred millions worth of war munitions.

I heard of a party last spring, who were climbing Mount Hood. Someone in advance loosened a little snow, and it began to roll and for the presence of mind of a young lady some distance in the rear she would have been overwhelmed, it becoming soon irresistible and swept every thing before it. Now I think that the way to do is to stop these little balls of snow before they start and so avoid disaster later.
