BIG CANBY FAIR READY TO THRILL

ANNUAL COUNTY DISPLAY OF RESOURCES IS JAMMED WITH FINE EXHIBITS

MANY SPECIAL FEATURES ON

Lots of Music, Plenty To See, and Big Showing of Blooded Stock Assure Success of Event

(By Nan Cochran)

Ward B. Lawton, secretary of the Clackamas County Fair, has been successful in securing a special excursion train for the Clackamas county fair to be held at Canby from September 20th to September 23rd, inclusive, this special to run between this city and Canby on Oregon City day, September 21, leaving here at 12:15 o'clock, and arriving at the fair grounds in time for the afternoon races. This will enable those who wish to go on this train to eat their noon meal at home instead of purchasing it on the fair grounds. This train will leave the fair grounds at 8 o'clock p. m., and arrangements are being made for an evening entertainment which will be given until the evening train leaves.

There will be plenty of entertainment during the afternoon, including an orchestra of five pieces, and a vocal solo, to make this one of the greatest days of the fair. Many of the business houses of this city will close during the afternoon, this allowing the employees an afternoon off. The Moose band will leave this city on the morning train for the fair grounds and will furnish plenty of music during the day, as well as during the races. Some of the best racing horses in the Northwest circuit will be seen in the races on that afternoon.

The Maximo high diving dogs, a carnival company with many concessions, and a stock parade will be some of the leading features of the day's programme. There will be plenty to see in the big pavilion, and in the livestock and poultry barns.

A. I. and J. Hughes, who are to have thirteen head of cattle of the Guernsey breed, are getting their animals in shape for showing purposes, and although there is to be stronger competition in the breed of animals they are engaged in breeding this year, they are sure to come out with some of the big prizes offered.

These cattle are sure to cause much attraction, especially "Kitchen-er, Governor of Corona," a grand champion at the Oregon State Fair of 1914, and "Katonah's Sequel Masher," another sire, and winner of the first prize in the two-year-old class of 1914 Oregon State Fair. This animal was awarded first place at the Oregon State Fair of 1913. "Red Wing, of the Glen," "Model's Jolly Lass," are cows that will no doubt bring prizes for their owner. "Red Wing of the Glen" has won prizes wherever shown. She is at the present time one of the cows in the milking test of the Clackamas County Cow Testing Association, and has made her requirements for advance registry in six months. "Jennie Van," another cow that will be taken to the county fair, and owned by the Red Wing Farm, has produced several pounds of butter fat per day since freshening in April. There are other animals in this herd that have filled the requirements in advance registry and that will be of interest to those visiting the livestock barns.

Mr. and Mrs. Hughes will be at the fair with their stock, and from there will go to the Oregon State Fair. Their herd at the fair will show what energy and modern methods can do in the way of breeding the pure-blood stock. They started in the dairying business in 1912, commencing with a bull and heifer of the Guernsey breed, these animals being purchased from Frank Reed Sanders, of Mesa, Arizona, at the Oregon State Fair, and since starting into the dairying industry with the Guernseys there have been added eight pure-bred calves, six of these being heifers and two bulls. They take great pride in showing their animals, and the visitors at the livestock barn will be given a cordial welcome by the Hughes family.

Elmer E. Dixon, one of the well known poultry fanciers of the Northwest, has been selected to act as judge of the poultry. Mr. Dixon has had years of experience in this line, and the Clackamas County Fair Association should be congratulated in securing his services as judge.

In the poultry department Mrs. A. J. Marrs, of Mt. Pleasant, will enter about 40 birds, having White Wyandottes, White Leghorns, Partridges Wyandottes, and several other breeds. "Fred" and "Vic," draft horses, owned by Mr. Marrs, will again make their appearance at the fair. These horses are always prize winners, and have not only won prizes but have been greatly admired by the fair visitors. Mrs. Bertha M. Story, another breeder of poultry, who has just returned from the state of Washing-

CROP OUTLOOK GOOD

Federal Survey Dated September 8th
Shows Heavy Yields

With all principal crops except apples and hops showing a marked increase over last year, the outlook for a bumper harvest all round in Oregon is excellent for 1915. Particularly is the wheat situation looking up, and figures show that Oregon will contribute materially to the bumper crop expected in the United States. According to the latest crop report issued by Uncle Sam, and dated September 8, conditions for Oregon are as follows:

Winter wheat yield for this year is estimated at 14,049,000 bushels, as compared with 13,684,000 bushels last year. Spring wheat will yield 3,690,000 bushels, as against 2,920,000 bushels last year.

Oats this year promise 14,200,000 bushels, as compared with 12,740,000 last year; and barley promises to give 4,310,000 bushels as against 3,660,000 last year.

Oregon will furnish 6,690,000 bushels of potatoes this year. Last year the yield was but 4,753,000 bushels. The crop forecast also credits this state with 1,850,000 tons of hay for 1915, as compared with 1,716,000 last year.

The apple crop will be 200,000 bushels less this year than last year; the forecast figures being 3,400,000 bushels less this year than last year, the forecast figures being 3,400,000 bushels for 1915 as compared with 3,600,000 bushels last year.

With but 86 percent of last year's acreage in clover, the condition of the seed crop this year is given as 84 percent perfect, which is two percent below the last 10-year average. The alfalfa crop in the state this year will be 88 percent of the full crop, which is six percent below the average for the last nine years.

Hops on September 1, this year, were conditioned in Oregon as 83 percent perfect. This is lower than for some years, and is five percent below the average for the last ten years.

Five percent fewer stock are being raised in Oregon this year than at the same time last year. In the United States at large, the raising of hogs has increased during the year, and the total number tabulated is seven percent above the number raised last year.

ANOTHER TEA PARTY

Chief of Police and Other Celebrities
Empty Bottles

Yet another social event was held in the city jail last week, when Chief of Police Ed Shaw "poured." The invited guests on this occasion were the Rev. W. T. Milliken and City Recorder John Loder. Nine quarts of whiskey and eight quarts of beer disappeared during the meeting.

Chief Shaw is getting to feel quite at home at these little affairs since Oregon City went dry, and can play mine host to the best advantage. Last week's party saw the confiscation of the nine quarts of whiskey that had formerly graced the stock of John Dickens' "blind pig;" and the eight quarts of beer that trickled down into the sewer came from the famous "John Doe" who brought a suitcase of liquid joy to the Firemen's tournament.

The sewer pipes have stood up well so far under the repeated drenchings with alcoholic stimulants; but it is said that the fish in the river are fast developing signs of chronic intoxication.

PIONEER WOMAN DIES

Mrs. Sarah E. Smith Passes Away at Home in St. Johns

Mrs. Sarah E. Smith, the mother of Mrs. Clemmy Martin, of Gladstone, died September 4 at her home in St. Johns. Mrs. Martin was with her mother at the hour of death, and previous to that had nursed her through her last illness.

Mrs. Sarah E. Smith was the wife of the late Joseph Smith, pioneer and soldier, who passed away 19 years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Smith came to Oregon in 1846. She was 81 years old at the time of her death. There were present at her bedside six of her children and two of her brothers when she died.

Mrs. Smith leaves to mourn her besides her children, 20 grandchildren, and 20 great-grandchildren.

She was a kind and devoted mother, a good neighbor and a true friend, and well may it be said of her "She has gone to her reward."

MAN IS HURT

Timber Falls on Molalla Farmer at Railroad Depot

S. A. Cordill, a farmer of the Molalla section, was seriously injured Tuesday while loading piling at the Southern Pacific depot. A heavy timber slipped from the load and fell on him to the ground, bruising him badly and possibly inflicting internal injuries. Medical aid was speedily furnished the injured man, and he was removed to his home, where he was reported to be resting easily.

"INSURRECTION" IN COUNCIL UP

MAJORITY VOTES DOWN FOES
OF ELEVATOR, AND BOND
SALE IS COMPLETE

THREE COUNCILMEN IN SULK

Hackett, Cox and Van Auker Refuse to Vote; and Templeton, Last of Quartette, Is Absent

The "economy" scheme of Councilmen Hackett, Templeton, and Cox, aided and abetted by "Jit" Van Auker, died a sulky death Friday night of last week, when the five leading members of the council—Albright, Metzner, Meyer, Andrews and Long—stood by the taxpayers and citizens of Oregon City and voted solidly on two popular measures. The first of these was the clearing up of a technical error in the sale of the elevator bonds by which the city is enabled to dispose of the securities and save the taxpayers one percent of interest a year; and the second was the appropriation of $3150 to purchase pipe for the hydraulic line that will make possible the speedy operation of the municipal lift at the Seventh street bluff.

Hackett and Cox justified their opposition of the measures by the double argument that they did not believe in bond issues, and by saying that the appropriation for the hydraulic line would cause the city to exceed its budget. Councilman "Jit" Van Auker—who with Mr. Hackett is custodian of a ten-dollar secret which the pair paid for—didn't have much to say; and when a vote on the two measures was called, the three "insurrectos" kept silent. People who witnessed the councilmanic wrangle gathered that the three did not have the courage of their convictions, and so didn't care to vote either way.

Councilman Templeton, who sharpens the city lawn-mower every month or so, was not on hand to add to the Friday evening festivity.

After disposing of the elevator matter the council discovered that there was opposition to some of the street paving program outlined. Property owners on some of the slightly used side streets downtown thought that a five-inch improvement was too heavy a paving to put down, and suggested that a two-inch redress be given these streets. The matter of substituting a redress for a five-inch paving will come up on petition at this week's council session.

Property owners on Seventh street sprung a happy surprise on the council, by asking for the improvement of the street from Main west to the river, instead of merely to the approach of the suspension bridge, as had been planned. The majority of the council was pleased indeed to note the attitude of these property owners, and their request for a change in the plans will probably be granted.

Application for repairs to some of the steps and walks leading over the bluff brought out the fact that sidewalk in many sections of the hill districts are badly in need of attention; and if the budget can be stretched sufficiently, the required work will be done. To preclude the possibility of damage suits, immediate repairs of these walks were ordered.

City Attorney Schuebel's request for a codification of the city ordinances was referred to a special committee composed of Hackett, Meyer and Andrews. It has been shown that the city ordinances are in a badly tangled condition, and the committee will probably recommend that the work be undertaken, even though it will call for considerable expense.

CHECK IS FOUND

Miss Tozier Solves Puzzle after Weeks
Of Effort

After the "mystery of the hidden check" had remained a mystery for two weeks, Miss Marie Tozier solved it last week, and found the coveted slip in the Oregon Machine works. Miss Tozier gets four dollars as a reward of her skill in solving the puzzle that has been appearing in the advertising pages of the Courier. Some of the checks were found easily, and some of them needed considerable skill on the part of the contestants before the mystery was untangled.

The current issue of the Courier carries the last "hidden check mystery." Two dollars will be the reward paid to the lucky reader who can locate the slip calling for payment. Read the "hidden check" page carefully, study the advertisements appearing thereon, and see if you can get the money. And remember that all the advertisers in the Courier, whether on the "hidden check page" or elsewhere, deserve your patronage.

The following is the solution of the hidden check, which was accidentally left out of the Check page—hidden check is romotuef senaroeth nag the kate race lpt

"JIT" HAS TROUBLES

Opposition to Weird Franchise Overlops Throughout City

Quite a number of citizens and taxpayers in the county seat don't like the wording of the weird and wonderful franchise proposed for Earl D. Van Auker, who may be the councilman from the third ward, and who may be another man by the same name. Aside from the irregularity in the publication of the franchise—it having been altered by City Attorney Schuebel after it was read before the city fathers—a number of taxpayers maintain that it is exclusive, inasmuch as part of it says "the rights and privileges of this franchise are granted to the said Earl D. Van Auker solely."

This opposition showed up in preliminary form at last week's council meeting, when a delegation of property holders was on hand to protest against the granting of it. As the measure does not come up for further action by the council until this week, the delegation was asked to call again. Members of the delegation said that they would return, and bring more recruits with them.

According to some of those opposing the franchise, Van Auker—who runs the jitney sometimes—does not own the machines used; and taxpayers believe that if any franchise at all is given it should be granted to the owners of the cars.

Councilman Van Auker is named "Earl D.," and his son has the same title. The franchise as it is drawn, say many people, thus does not specify to whom the rights are given; and it is said that in the event of an accident, responsibility would be thus difficult to fix. The Van Auker franchise furthermore carries with it no payment of either service or cash, which people say makes it illegal.

SOCKS BRING WOE

Wife Asks Divorce, Alleging Husband
Didn't Change Often

Mrs. Elizabeth Lillie doesn't think any man ought to wear his socks for seven weeks, and then go about the house with his shoes off. So she says in a complaint in which she asks for a divorce from Sheridan Lillie, whom she accuses of doing this and other things.

The couple were married in Oregon City in November, 1914. Mrs. Lillie says that when they were married her husband refused to give the minister who tied the knot the usual gratuity, and that in all their married life her husband only gave her ten dollars. Out of this ten-spot, she avers, she had to pay a dentist's bill and subscribe for a newspaper. She even says that her husband's idea of economy were so pronounced that he refused to buy postage stamps for her correspondence.

Regarding her husband's socks, Mrs. Lillie says that "the odor from them was so strong that plaintiff was compelled to leave the room when defendant removed his shoes. After much solicitation from plaintiff, defendant changed the socks, and when plaintiff destroyed the strong scented socks, defendant flew into a fit of passion, abused defendant, telling her that there was much good wear left in those socks."

NOT AS IT SEEMS

Portland Policemen Hurt Each Other but Austrians are Blamed

People who read the headlines in a certain morning paper on Monday of this week probably got the idea that Austrians rioting near Linnton had beaten up and otherwise hurt two Portland police officers who went to scene to quell the trouble. Careful reading of the story under the headlines, however, shows that the Austrians were not as blood-thirsty as it at first appeared. While the initial riot was a warm enough affair, and while gunplay was in order, the real damage was done after the trouble ended.

Then it was that Detective Captain Baty, rushing headlong to where the trouble had been, fell down a hole in the street and broke a shoulder and some ribs; and then it was, also, that Police Captain Circle, trying to lift Capt. Baty out of the hole, sprained his back. While one must sympathize with the two police officers, and hope for their speedy recovery; it yet appears that the two captains ought not to have tried so hard to be heroes after the real riot was over.

SENATOR COMING HERE

Mr. Chamberlain to be in County Seat
Saturday Forenoon

Senator Chamberlain, who has long upheld the state of Oregon in the higher branch of Congress at Washington, D. C., will be in Oregon City for a brief visit Saturday morning as guest of Postmaster John Cooke. Mr. Chamberlain will arrive in the city at eleven o'clock, and will remain until half past one, when he leaves for Molalla, where he is to address a meeting of the grange.

Representative democrats of the county seat will meet Senator Chamberlain upon his arrival here, and later there will probably be an informal reception in his honor at the Commercial club. Senator Chamberlain will bring with him word of the progress of the administration in matters affecting this state, and his coming is eagerly awaited.

TIME TO WIND UP ROAD FIGHT

COUNTY COURT TO DEVOTE WHOLE DAY TO PLANS FOR BETTERMENT

ALL SIDES WILL BE HEARD

Every Person Interested in Highway
Matters Should Attend Open
Session September 25

Clackamas county can have any kind of roads that it wants, and may have them made and repaired by any system that is desired.

Clackamas county may keep the supervisors on the job, or the county may divide the road districts in such a way that four skilled highway engineers will have entire charge of all public work.

The county court wants to find out what the people of the county really want, and for this purpose has set aside September 25 as the time when it will go thoroughly into the road situation.

YOU OUGHT TO ATTEND THIS MEETING.

September 25 the county court will take up the matter of changing road districts and establishing boundaries. This is a matter of regular routine, but there has been so much argument, for and against the various systems of doing road work in this county that Judge Anderson and the commissioners have determined to take the matter up and thresh it out at the regular road district meeting. There is every reason to believe that the county court will be guided by the will of the people as expressed at this meeting, and will adopt such a system as may be recommended.

THAT IS WHY YOU OUGHT TO BE THERE.

Every resident of Clackamas county is interested in the roads. Some people think the system of highway work ought to be changed. Others think it ought to be modified. Some are in favor of a radical departure from all former ways of providing highways for the transaction of public business. Each faction has tried to get the ear of the county court and impress its own plans upon the county commissioners. This has resulted in confusion, even while the county court has tried to do the best that circumstances would permit.

Now the opportunity is offered for a thorough discussion of the real situation. People interested in roads can look the county court in the eye and say what they think. The county court can answer them on the spot, and maybe the endless argument can be settled. At any rate, the matter may be talked over, and an understanding reached.

The county court is trying to do the best it can, and wants to please the people. But the people will have to tell the court what is wanted, and for this reason YOU OUGHT TO BE THERE.

Maybe it will seem best to redivide the county, so as to have but four road districts. Maybe it will seem best to continue the districts as at present, but to engage a highway engineer as general supervisor. And maybe, after the matter is talked over and discussed the present system will be found adequate. Whatever the outcome of the meeting, better feeling ought to result—for there ought to be an understanding of the situation from all sides. And so that you may do your part, YOU OUGHT TO BE THERE.

Such a meeting as is planned by Judge Anderson and the commissioners will afford an opportunity for a thorough discussion of road problems, for hearing all sides, and for an intelligent understanding of the problem of cost, assets and the demands of the different localities. Such an understanding will make possible intelligent road work, directed in a uniform direction. And once such an understanding is reached, half of the road problem in this county is disposed of.

Remember the date, September 25, and make it a point to be on hand. You can help by your presence, and so—

It might be well for the congregation to rise and sing "The Tie That Binds" before we open these services, brethren.

For we think we see something that would make the hymn appropriate at this time.

We note by Wednesday morning's Enterprise that T. M. Gilmore, president of the National Model License League, "discusses" with George C. Brownell the Oregon statewide prohibition law. And we note further that there is a hearty accord between Mr. Gilmore and Mr. Brownell, even as to

JUDGE HITS KEYNOTE

H. S. Anderson Advances Plan for Disposition of Grant Lands

At a meeting of the Oregon City Commercial club last Saturday night the problem of the disposal of the Oregon & California land grant was discussed, and O. D. Eby, of the county seat, was chosen as a delegate to the conference called by Governor Withcombe. Mr. Eby will represent the Commercial club on the Clackamas county delegation.

County Judge H. E. Anderson was one of those who spoke on the land grant problem, and at the close of the meeting practically everybody present commented most favorably upon his remarks, and declared that he had struck the keynote of the situation confronting the state. Judge Anderson spoke in reply to those who advocated the sale of the lands at $2.50 an acre, the originally stipulated price.

Judge Anderson made the point that the land was today worth far more than $2.50 an acre, and that its increase in valuation had been brought about by the development of adjoining land by the people who had labored to upbuild the state. To sell the land now at the original price, said the judge, would make it possible for 308 citizens to take up claims of 160 acres each, and would benefit them tremendously—but such a plan, he pointed out, would not be of particular benefit to the other inhabitants of Oregon. Instead of adopting such a plan, Judge Anderson expressed the opinion that the land ought to be fairly appraised and then offered for sale at a figure that would approach its present value.

The difference between this figure and the $2.50 equity which the railroad had in the land Judge Anderson believed ought to be put in some state fund—preferably a road or school fund—so that people at large might benefit by the sale. Such a plan would also keep speculators from buying the great lands for a song and holding them for later sales. Judge Anderson said that he believed that each buyer should prove that he was going to be a bona fide settler on the land, and that he should be required to make a certain amount of improvement thereon.

Judge Anderson, in his remarks, showed that he had studied the problem deeply and in detail; and his conclusions were listened to with deep interest. The judge will be a member of the Clackamas county delegation at Salem, and he is looked upon as one of the "strong" men who will be on hand to discuss the problem.

Little support was given the plan advanced by Christian Schuebel, appearing to be the consensus of opinion that adoption of the Schuebel idea would merely continue to tie up the timber lands, and keep them where they would in no way benefit the county or state tax levies.

IS IT SO?

Men Now Get Blamed for Keeping
Women Away from Church

In the October Woman's Home Companion Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, writes a sermon to fathers in which he says:

"It is an extraordinary fact that so many American men should be willing to shirk their religious obligations. They do it habitually while in the days of courtship they may be found in the church, but after the wedding day they attend church less frequently, and by and by drop out altogether. This constitutes for many a woman her first serious domestic problem. She does not know what her duty is. She loves the church, and she also loves her husband. If he prefers to stay at home, she is likely to stay with him. In this way many a woman crucifies her spiritual inclinations and sinks down into the indifference of a worldly life."

SOME MORE ECONOMY

"City of Destiny" Outdoes Even Our Own "Tight" Councilmen

Oregon City may take a back seat and hang its head. Its council doesn't know what real economy is, in spite of the occasional "economy" fits that its members throw from time to time.

Any county seat "boss" who wants to learn the fine art of saving money ought to go to Tacoma, "the city of destiny," as the natives like to call it—the place where "rail meets sail," and all that sort of thing.

Tacoma has a commission form of government, and the commissioners are bent on saving money. So they have decided that they don't need a chief of police any more, and are going to abolish the office. The commissioner of public safety will be all the chief of police that there is, and he won't get any extra money for being on the job.

Considering that Tacoma hasn't had a "real" chief of police since the days of the great Chief Maloney, maybe the city can get along just as well. All the chiefs since Maloney's days have been amateurs, and haven't made a very big hit.

Only Four Here

Clackamas county has but four legally registered chiropractors, according to a report of the state board of examiners. They are: Roy L. Dunn of Gladstone; George Hoeye and George F. Anderson, of Oregon City, and A. B. Cole, of Canby.

DANIELS TRIES TO ECONOMIZE

Congressman Tavenner, of Illinois, is Outspoken in His Condemnation of Munitions "Ring"

(By Clyde H. Tavenner)

Realizing the government was being overcharged for turbine rotary drums, Secretary of the Navy Daniels—who, with one exception, is the only Secretary of the Navy that I can find any trace of who has ever made a real fight to escape the extortions of the armor and ammunition rings—induced an independent English firm to submit a bid. The Bethlehem and Midvale companies bid $169,568 and $100,272, respectively, while the English firm offered to furnish the drums for $57,436, a saving of $102,836 to the government over the lowest bid of the ring.

Personally, I believe that these officers who, in the expenditure of the people's money, have been paying $115,075 for supplies which could have been obtained for $58,246, should, somewhere or in some manner, be required to make a public accounting for their acts. The thing that riles the blood concerning the manner in which the millions have been squandered by our Army and Navy officers is that this money did not come from the pockets of the rich, but that it has been wrung from the poorest of the poor. All of these wasted millions have been collected by a tax on the thing that the people eat, wear and use, none having come through the customhouses and internal-revenue offices, which means that the people have been paying the cost of militarism in the form of increased cost of living.

By the most ingenious maneuvering among the war traffickers, Secretary Daniels has been able to save some $2,000,000 from the clutches of the greedy patriots for profit. But, alas, the war trust has at last forced him into a corner, and he is again wholly at its mercy. To elucidate, I am informed that before the outbreak of the European war Secretary Daniels sought, by inquiry, to ascertain from companies in the ring the price of a certain projectile. A price of $490 was made him. The Secretary then invited the representatives of independent foreign companies to visit him and submit prices, at the same time taking extreme care that the domestic bidders should hear of his supposed intentions. The result was the ring reduced its prices from $490 to $325, and the Secretary made his purchases at that figure. Since the European war broke out, Secretary Daniels, I am told, decided to purchase more of the same projectile, but, to his astonishment, was quoted a price of $425. The ammunition-ring bidders, being business men as well as patriots, had taken advantage of the fact that there is no possible chance of the Secretary obtaining anything in the way of war materials from Europe as long as the present war holds out, and boosted their prices accordingly.

Is there no way whatever, it may be asked, by which the people can protect themselves from the greed of the War Trust magnates? Yes; just one way. That is by the Government taking the profit out of war and preparation for war by manufacturing all of its own munitions, armor, cannon, and battleships. Both Washington and Lincoln advocated the nationalization of the manufacture of war munitions as sound public policy. Government manufacture as a policy need have no bearing whatever on the question of whether we shall have a large or small Navy.

If the Government will manufacture all of its own war materials, millions of dollars will be saved annually to the taxpayers as a result of the already demonstrated ability of Uncle Sam to manufacture at a cost much below the prices of the War Trust, as I shall endeavor to show. Government manufacture will mean that the workmen who perform the labor of actually making the munitions will receive higher wages and better working conditions than the employees of the ring of private contractors receive, as these firms number among them the most bitter enemies of organized labor in the United States, working 51 per cent of their employees 12 hours a day, according to a report of the United States Bureau of Labor made just after an investigation in 1910.

Personal Item

Mr. Larry Sullivan, formerly proprietor of a boarding house for sailors in Portland, is soon to go to California to conduct a campaign for temperance. He has spent several hours in the county seat recently, talking over his campaign with George C. Brownell; and Mr. Sullivan says that George is sure a good train for a dry worker.
