CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DECLARED TO FOLLOW CLOSELY THE TEACHINGS OF CHRIST

HISTORY OF MOVEMENT TOLD

Review of Lecture Given in Oregon
City is of Interest to all
Students of Religion

Mary Baker Eddy, the Founder of the Christian Science movement, was a profound and far-seeing thinker, an earnest humanitarian, a close student of the Bible, a noble Christian woman. She created a new epoch in religious thinking. All her writings are distinguished by their high moral and religious atmosphere, by their relentless logic, and by their inspiring honesty of utterance which never falters nor swerves aside from its straight path in order to compromise or propitiate.

Her blessed reward the millions who are won
To happier lives, the work which she hath done
Hath carved her name among the earth's immortals,
Beloved Chief, whose work hath just begun!

The text-book of Christian Science is Mrs. Eddy's "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." The right study of its pages, whether the reader accepts or declines its teachings, is sure to broaden, to elevate, and to purify one's horizon of thinking.

In its brief history the Christian Science movement has shown a vital energy which has amazed the world. It has had no help from outside sources; it has confronted the relentless opposition of several institutions and businesses; it has made no appeals to the fears or excitable emotions of mankind. Its appeals are made to its indisputable array of facts, to man's highest reason and spiritual discernment, and to the confirmation found in the Bible. Thoughtful observers, outside of its followers, have been led to frequent comment on the significance of the fact that there is surely something in Christian Science which makes towards righteousness and higher citizenship in the lives and homes of its adherents.

What is the meaning of the fact that in less than forty years the beneficiaries and followers of Christian Science are already numbered by accumulating hundreds of thousands, and to be found throughout the earth? It means that its doctrine and practice have stood the difficult test, and have been found to be dependable, and for the betterment of our race. It means that its students have found something which has proven itself to be a practical help in their lives, and which lessens their pains and sorrows and brings more light and gladness into their homes. The grateful witnesses of its healing works in the overcoming of sin and sickness are now to be found everywhere throughout the civilized earth. Is it not plain that the beneficent mission of Christian Science has really just begun its redemptive work? Already its evidence surpasses both in quantity and quality the evidence to be heard in any courtroom in the most solemn and important issues. This evidence stands wholly unimpeached. It proves overwhelmingly that the Christ way of healing sin and sickness is a restored benediction to the world, and that the promises of Jesus are being verified daily—for example, his promise, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."

The proven facts in the history of the Christian Science movement show convincingly that the way which was taught by Jesus for overcoming sin and sickness was, as his own utterances indicate, for all mankind throughout the centuries. For what he said was true, whether by promise or admonition or command to his followers; and once true, always true. A truth never changes nor perishes. When Jesus said to his followers, to you and me included, "If ye love me, keep my commandments," he meant all, and not just a convenient part of His command to His followers, made with no restriction or limitation in respect to country or century, in his plain and unmistakable words: "Preach the gospel." "Heal the sick." Jesus gave this commandment to His followers in order that His gospel might spread, and what was still more important, that His gospel might be preserved. The great importance which Jesus attached to healing the sick as well as preaching His gospel is shown by the fact that He was not content with the preaching only, but sought to prove what He preached by evidential facts wherever He went, to persuade mankind of the truth of His teachings. This is also shown by His words: "Though ye believe not me, believe the works." And one of His apostles declared: "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."

Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

HACKETT SPOILS RECORD

Councilman Makes 13 Motions, but Recklessness Hurts Percentage

If Councilman Hackett hadn't been so anxious to get in the record Wednesday evening he would have made a batting average that might have won the envy of some of the big leaguers. As it was he made 13 motions, and only lost three of them. Two of the motions that he didn't get over were for adjournment, and if he hadn't made these his records would have stood ten home-runs out of 11 times at bat. And that would have been good some.

Wednesday night's council meeting was like the one held in Sandy last week, and of which the Sandy News said "no important business was allowed." Oregon City's council didn't let a single thing get past it.

The game opened early, with Harry Woodward offering to buy a sweeper and clean Main street and collect the garbage for $125 a month. It now costs the city $131 a month to do this. The matter was referred to the street committee.

An ordinance to vacate the alley in block 63, following a petition of all property owners, was read first time—and then laid on the shelf because due publication of the notice of vacation had not been made.

The special committee to which the Carver jitney line franchise was referred reported favorably on the document and moved that it pass. City Attorney Chris Schubel appeared that one and got it referred to him.

A jitney franchise covering eight Portland-Oregon City jits was snared in the same place, Chris opining that it would have to be "doctored up first," and it was referred to his hospital for lame statutes. Jitneys allowed to run without franchises till October 8, on motion of Meyer.

Offer of the county court to put up $50 for the improvement of a portion of Division street if the city would do likewise brought out the first Hackett motion. Hackett moved that the $50 be saved, and it was.

The mayor appointed Councilmen Andrews, Metzner and Meyer a committee to act with the city engineer in adjusting High street claims.

A remonstrance against the improvement of Sixth street was granted on motion of Hackett.

Remonstrance against improvement of Third street, from Main to Water had Mr. Hackett's approval, but he later withdrew his motion for its passage because owing to the manner in which the resolution was drawn it would tie up the improvement from Main street to the railroad track.

Remonstrance against improvement of Fifth street, granted, Hackett.

Remonstrance, Fourth street, granted, Hackett.

Remonstrance, Tenth street, Main to Water, granted, Hackett.

Remonstrance, Ninth street, granted, Hackett.

Remonstrance, alley, block 27, granted, Hackett.

Hackett moved to adjourn, lost it.

Mayor Jones asked the recorder to notify all property owners on streets against which no remonstrance to improvement had been filed to sign up for the improvement and apply directly to the Worswick company, so as to get quick action.

Hackett moved to adjourn, lost it.

Mayor Jones said that Prof. D. C. Sowers, of Eugene, was willing to tell the council all he knew about municipal government, in an illustrated lecture, and added that he thought it would be helpful to the council to hear him. Councilman Meyer moved that Prof. Sowers be invited to come here and talk to the council in the Commercial club rooms.

Mayor Jones also asked heads of committees to bring in their third quarterly report on the remains of the budget at the regular October meeting; and at the same time to submit estimates for the 1916 budget. The idea of tying the hands of the 1916 council with a 1915-model budget seemed to appeal to the city dads, and they all grinned.

Hackett moved adjournment, and got it.

Score: Hackett made 13 motions, won ten; Meyer made two and carried them both. Mayor played safe three times. Time of game, one hour and 15 minutes. Attendance, small outside of the players.

WORK ON LOCKS SOON

Government About Ready to Commence Reconstruction of Canal

With all material on hand, and with a derrick to handle the heavy masonry partly completed, federal engineers in charge of the reconstruction of the canal about the falls of the Willamette expect to start work on the new dividing wall within ten days. Following the construction of this wall the canal will be materially deepened by bating out the rock bed, and new gates will be installed. It is then believed that navigation thru the ditch will be possible at all stages of the river.

During the past week water in the old canal has been so low that even light draught barges could not be taken through the locks. Monday the lower chamber of the canal had but little over a foot of water in it; and river freight is still being transferred around the locks whenever up-river and lower-river steamers meet at Oregon City.

EVERYBODY PAYS TRUST'S TRIBUTE

INCREASED COST OF LIVING
PARTLY BLAMED ON BIG
"MUNITION RING"

POOR MAN FEELS DRAIN MOST

Indirect Taxation Which Supports Big Government Outlay for Army and Navy Strikes All Classes

In further discussing the matter in which the "ammunition ring" has been fattening at the expense of the nation at large, Congressman Clyde T. Tavenner, of Illinois, recently drew a parallel between the increase of appropriations for the navy and the similar increase in the per capita amount of federal appropriations. In speaking of this, Mr. Tavenner says:

"It is interesting to note that the per capita appropriations by Congress for all purposes is climbing up just about in proportion to the increased cost of the Navy, as the following figures will show:

Year	Appropriations	Per Capita
1890.....	$ 20,000,000.....	$ 6.15
1900.....	48,000,000.....	9.05
1912.....	126,000,000.....	10.73
1914.....	140,000,000.....	11.09

"It is pertinent to inquire where the millions that have been poured into militarism to the enrichment of the armor and ammunition capitalists came from. These millions were not picked up in the streets, and they were not contributed by the rich. Our citizens have not contributed in proportion to their wealth, but the poor man has paid on an average almost as much as the rich; and since there are 99 poor to every rich man, it means that the millions that have piled up in the pockets of the armor-plate magnates have come from the pockets of the poor.

"And this is the feature of militarism—gone mad that strikes home the fact that the wasted millions did not come from an income tax or inheritance tax levied on those best able to bear the burden, none of it having been collected by a direct tax, but that practically every penny of the $2,000,000,000 expended on the Army and Navy in the last 10 years came thru the customhouses and the internal revenue offices. Since customhouses and internal-revenue offices do not levy taxes on men according to their wealth or ability to pay, but solely upon things the people eat, wear and use, it means that the people pay the armor-plate makers' bills in the increased cost of living.

"To make learner my statement that the poor man has been paying almost as much toward defraying the expenses of the federal government as the rich man, permit me to correct the impression of the average person that some part of the taxes he has been paying to his local tax collector has been sent to Washington for the purpose of maintaining the federal government. The truth is that not one penny of the taxes we have been paying our local tax collectors has come to Washington. Every penny of such taxes has gone toward defraying the expenses of township, city, county and state. Therefore if a millionaire pays a heavy state tax none of it goes toward defraying the cost of the army and navy or maintaining the federal government. The manner in which the people have been supporting the army and navy and meeting all other federal expenses has been by paying increased prices for things eaten, worn or used. The local grocer and dry goods merchant has been the federal tax collector without knowing it, or without his average customer knowing it. To the extent that the average poor man eats the same amount of food as the rich man he has been paying as much tax. Funds for the maintenance of the army and navy, as well as all other federal expenses, have thus in the past been raised wholly in the form of increased cost of living.

"It is true, of course, that we now have an income-tax law on the statutes, and this will help some; but until the tax on incomes in excess of $10,000 annually is increased much above the present rates, and until there is a stiff Federal inheritance tax law, so that those who derive the greatest benefit from military expenditures will bear the heaviest burden of their cost, as they should, the poor man will continue to carry the heaviest load in proportion to his ability to pay, just as he always has done and just as the stone in the bottom of the wall bears more weight than its more fortunate brethren on the top."

Farmers to Meet

Beaver Creek local Farmers' Union will meet Saturday evening, September 25; when orders for supplies and feed will be taken. All members are urged to be present. The F. A. E. will hold a brief business session at half past seven, according to W. W. Harris, secretary.

MANY HURT AT FAIR

Runaway Racehorse Gallops Through
Panic-stricken Crowd at Canby

Breaking through the frail barrier that protected the paddock gate at the county fair racetrack at Canby Wednesday afternoon, the horse Zomdell, owned and driven by J. W. Merrill, leaped into the densely packed crowd that lined the course fence, and trampled people right and left; at the same time causing a panic in which others were less seriously hurt.

Mrs. Samuel Shanbeck, of Hubbard was struck by the frenzied horse and knocked seven feet, where she was rolled under a wagon. Her right arm was broken and dislocated at the elbow, her scalp cut in several places, and her body bruised and mashed.

Levi Yoder, of Aurora, was knocked down and bruised, and his face badly cut.

D. Steffani, of Canby, was bruised about the body and head.

Mrs. D. Steffani, of Canby, was seriously bruised and shaken up and sustained nervous shock.

The year old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Steffani was also among those injured, being seriously bruised.

A Miss Hult, of Molalla, was knocked down and her leg lacerated.

Other people in the crowd, which broke back from the fence in a wild panic when the horse plunged into the midst of the spectators, sustained minor injuries and bruises in the rush for safety.

The accident happened in full view of the grand stand, near the end of the fourth race of the last race. Zomdell and Prince Seattle, owned and driven by Fred Woodcock, were rushing down the stretch in a close finish, when the two sulkies collided. A wheel was torn off Merrill's vehicle and the horse, Zomdell, swerved from the track straight for the paddock gate. There was not time for people to get back, and the maddened animal plunged into the crowd. Merrill, who was driving, leaped from the wrecked sulky, and was unhurt.

FOUR KILLED IN CRASH

Wilsonville Men Die When Car Hits
Auto Truck at Crossing

Charles Gage and George Butson, of Wilsonville, and Z. Barringer and John Niece, of Tualatin, all riding on a big auto truck on the Boone's Ferry road were instantly killed Wednesday forenoon when their vehicle was struck by a speeding westbound Southern Pacific train near Galbraith station, just over the Washington county line. The bodies of the dead men were mangled almost beyond recognition by the heavy cars, and their remains were scattered along the track for over 500 feet.

The accident was caused, it is said by failure of the driver of the truck, Gage, to hear the bell and whistle of the approaching train; though it is known that he was proceeding with caution as he approached the railroad crossing.

At first it was thought that the accident had occurred in Clackamas county, and Coroner Hempstead was notified. Further investigation showed that it was in Washington county, however, and Coroner Barrett of that county took charge of the inquiry. The men riding on the auto truck were all traveling to Wilsonville, where they were going to dispose of a load of hogs that were also on the truck.

ROY TOBAN DIES

Oregon City Man, Hurt in Auto Accident, Succumbs to Injuries

Roy Toban, who was thrown from an automobile near Camas two weeks ago, died Wednesday in a Vancouver hospital as the result of internal injuries received at the time of the accident. Up to within a few hours of his death hopes for his recovery were held out by the surgeons in charge, and the end came as a shock to his family and friends. The remains were brought to Oregon City for the funeral service and interment.

Mr. Toban was well known in the county seat, where he had formerly been employed in the local mills. He was 25 years of age, and was married to the youngest daughter of the late Edward Follansby. Mr. and Mrs. Toban had one child, a bright little boy, now a little over a year old. Mr. Toban is survived by his widow, his mother and father, three sisters and a brother.

In the accident which caused his death, Mr. Toban was accompanied by his wife; who with him was enjoying a day's outing with friends from Camas, where he had been working up to that time. Mrs. Toban was severely hurt in the same disaster, but had recovered sufficiently to be able to visit her husband at the hospital the day before he passed away.

ADVICE TO CLERGY

Methodist Bishop Says Pastors Should Not Always Find Fault

Nagging and fault-finding ministers were held up as undesirable last week at San Francisco, when Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of the Methodist church delivered an address to a class about to enter the ministry.

"A minister should not be a fault-finding or nagging person. Some ministers are constantly seeking the bad in persons and magnifying their faults. They ought to look for the best," he said.

CHAMBERLAIN IS ORATOR OF MEET

SENATOR HOLDS ATTENTION
AT GRANGE GATHERING
HELD AT MOLALLA

NOT FOR PEACE AT ANY COST

Policy and Achievements of Administration Are Outlined in Great Speech Before Farmers

Declaring that he believed the American people as a whole would gladly forego any benefits that they may be obtaining as a result of the war in Europe if they could see peace again established throughout the world, Senator George E. Chamberlain of Oregon, struck the keynote of patriotism at the grange meeting at Molalla Saturday.

"We may be receiving some extraordinary benefits from the great war in the other half of the world," said the senator, "but such is the noble spirit of American citizens that they would gladly forego these benefits if they could see peace established throughout the world. I am not for war, nor am I for 'peace at any price.' As far as this country is concerned I believe that we should be prepared with an efficient army and an efficient navy—not necessarily a large army and navy, but an efficient one."

The senator took the platform after C. E. Spence, master of the state grange, had delivered his address. Mr. Spence discussed among other things, the action of the conference on the Oregon & California land grants, which he had left but the day before. He gave his auditors a most comprehensive idea of the different forces that had been at work in the meeting at Salem, and his remarks were listened to with great interest.

Senator Chamberlain, when he took the rostrum, prefaced his more formal remarks by anecdotes of the Molalla country, telling of the change he had noted each time he visited the section, and congratulating those present on the progress that their community had made.

While declaring that he was not primarily making a political speech, Senator Chamberlain declared that the Wilson administration had accomplished much for the benefit of the common people of the United States. He especially emphasized the declaration that the next congress would evolve a plan whereby a lower rate of interest and a longer term would be granted to borrowers in the agricultural section of the country, and he believed that this was one of the fundamentals of success and permanent prosperity to the entire country. The senator spoke of the enactment of progressive national legislation, saying that there had never been enacted a progressive piece of legislation that it did not turn out to the benefit of the masses, and cited particularly the postal savings bank as an instance, which, he said, had been bitterly fought by the big interests because they believed it would seriously injure them, when as a matter of fact it aided.

Commenting on the tariff Senator Chamberlain said that when the question of reduction in the tariff on wool came up, he, together with Senator Walsh, of Montana, and others interested in this commodity, called upon the president and spent three hours in trying to get the latter not to insist upon the reduction as great as was planned, believing that the industry of several trades would be destroyed, having been so importuned by their constituents.

"That reduction was made and what do we find today," said Senator Chamberlain. "Why, wool today in Oregon is higher than ever in its history. The same thing was said of agricultural products, but look at the prices today."

Senator Chamberlain praised President Wilson for his attitude in the European questions, and said that not since the time of the immortal Lincoln had a president been confronted with the problems which Wilson has had to face, and there is not a moment that his thoughts are not with and for the masses of people of his country as against the classes or interests. The senator said there was no reason on earth why our country should become embroiled in war with Europe, and according to his view "there isn't going to be any war."

Commenting upon the sinking of the Lusitania and the Arabic, Senator Chamberlain asked if those 100 Americans who sailed on the former and three on the latter were patriotic to this country when they sailed in the face of warning, knowing that their very acts would cause at least controversy between this country and Germany?

NEW WATER SOON

South Fork Pipe Line now being Given
Final Pressure Tests

Engineer Hal Rands, who has been superintending the construction of the South Fork pipe line, which will bring pure mountain water to Oregon City, believes that service through the city mains will be given consumers within the next two weeks. The pipe is now all in place, and connections with the city system have been made, but water will not be turned on until the line is given a thorough pressure test, and until the old reservoir has been flushed out.

This flushing will be done through the incomplete West Linn pipe, and after the mountain water reaches the reservoir it will be permitted to run through the West Linn main and into the river for a couple of days. After that, if no leaks or other sources of trouble have developed, the water will be sent into the Oregon City mains, and the old pumping station closed down.

According to Water Superintendent Howell, the old pumping plant will not be dismantled for many months, but will be kept as an emergency equipment in case trouble should occur on the pipe line. In fact the old pumping plant will be retained ready for service until the new reservoir, which is a part of the county seat's $375,000 water system, has been built. The present reservoir, Mr. Howell says, will not hold sufficient water to tide the city over any serious emergency that might result from a break in the pipe line.

BIG BARN BURNS

Canby Livery Stable Totally Destroyed
by Flame Sunday

Four horses, one of them a valuable stallion owned by John Rainey, were cremated in a fire that destroyed the city feed barn at Canby early Sunday morning, and two men who were sleeping in the place had narrow escapes from death in fighting their way out of the smoke-filled building. Though a big crowd soon gathered and fought hard to save adjoining property, the barn itself burned to the ground with practicality all of its contents.

It is believed that the fire started from a cigarette stub that may have been thrown in the hay earlier Saturday evening, and which smoldered until the flames got beyond control. The two men in the barn were unable to unlock the big doors, through which they might have led the horses to safety, and in order to protect themselves had to break open a small window and scramble to the outside air. Coming just before the opening of the fair, when a heavy business would have been done, the loss is more than would ordinarily have been sustained.

BRUNSWICK IS SOLD

Ex-Sheriff Buys County Seat Hotel and Restaurant

Ernest T. Mass, former sheriff of Clackamas county, this week purchased the Brunswick hotel and restaurant on Main, near Seventh street, Oregon City, and in about fifteen days will open the place as a first-class caravansary. In order to properly cater to the trade which he expects, Mr. Mass will have extensive improvements made in the property, including the installation of a new plate glass front, and repairs and alterations throughout the premises.

Being centrally located, the hotel and restaurant will make a strong appeal for county seat trade; and the wide circle of friendship which the ex-sheriff enjoys is expected to make the place at once popular with the public. Mr. Mass is modest in speaking of his plans, but says that the fare offered in the restaurant will be of the very best; and that in the hotel the comfort of his guests will ever be his first thought.

MURDER THREAT CHARGED

West Linn Man Arrested Upon Complaint of Woman

Constable Jack Frost arrested Andrew A. Osborne, of West Linn, Monday, the warrant charging a "threat to commit a felony." The warrant was issued on a complaint sworn to by Minnie Raymond, and says that Osborne "threatened orally to kill and murder the said Minnie Raymond."

It is said that Osborne and the woman making the complaint have lived together for the past 17 years as man and wife, and that the alleged threat of murder grew out of a discussion that the two had in regard to their mutual business arrangements. The Raymond woman acquainted District Attorney Hedges with the details of her life before the warrant was issued.

REPUBLICANS AT SEA

"Knockers" of Administration Cannot Agree on Methods of Attack

The Capital Journal, of Salem, has taken the trouble to keep more or less track of the futile attacks made upon the Wilson administration by the listen-to-his-master's-voice papers of the valley, and in a recent issue calls attention to some of the weird things these papers are saying. Commenting on these outbursts, the Capital Journal says:

COUNTY'S FAIR IS PERFECT SUCCESS

EXHIBITS OUTCLASS EVERY FORMER SHOWING, AND VISITORS MARVEL

RESOURCES WELL DISPLAYED

Attendance Gratifies Management and Best of Weather Adds to Pleasure of All Who Turn Out

Clackamas county's fair, at Canby during the week, will go down in history as one of the most successful displays from every viewpoint that has ever been staged in the big white buildings at the southern end of the county. Not only was the fair a financial success from the standpoint of pure business; but the displays and the attractions offered were well above the average, and reflected great credit upon the county and upon those who had the details of the big annual show in charge.

As an exhibition of the resources of Clackamas county, and as proof of the fact that this section of the state is one of the most fertile and productive regions in the nation, the fair more than fulfilled expectations. Keen critics of fair displays viewed with wonder the showings made by the different communities and exhibitors, and declared that never before had they seen such a remarkable proof of the good fortune of the people who were privileged to live in Clackamas county. In fact the entire fair was a constant surprise to those who visited it, and on every hand were fruits, vegetables, grains and live-stock that would prove prize winners in any exhibition.

The stock displays were especially gratifying to those who are personally interested in the development of the county, and who realize that in order to take front rank as a producing section of Oregon, Clackamas county must have the best of stock as well as the best of agricultural products. Probably never before in the history of any county fair in Oregon have the judges been confronted with such a fine line of livestock as they had to grade at the Canby fair; and the showing reflected the great steps in advance that have been taken by county ranchers.

Aside from the usual exhibits at the fair, many innovations were also to be noticed this year. The industrial displays from the schools throughout the county showed marked improvement over former years, and proved conclusively that the rising generation hereabouts is composed of young people who will be satisfied with nothing but the best, and who will constantly strive for further betterment. In the same way the exhibits of domestic work ranked far ahead of anything shown before, and revealed the presence in the county of scores of women who have become experts in the use of the needle and the crochet hook.

Nor were the amusement features at the fair lacking. There was everything from cane racks to excellent racing, and everything was first class at that. The races drew crowds daily, and real and intense rivalry developed among the jockeys. Other sporting events that were staged also brought out real competition, and kept the crowds that witnessed them excited till final decisions were made.

Tuesday, which was Oregon City and German day at the exhibition, was perhaps the most notable occasion of the meet; though Molalla day, which followed it, also drew record crowds within the fence. A feature of Tuesday was the drill and marching exhibition given by the Fallsarians; while special music on this day augmented the instrumental program, which was throughout the fair one of the most enjoyable features.

FIRE GUTS HOUSE

Residence on Hill Scene of Early Morning Battle with Flames

Shortly after four o'clock Tuesday morning the fire department was called to Fourteenth and J. Q. Adams streets, where a vacant house, the property of William Lowe, was blazing merrily by itself. In short order the firemen got two streams of water on the building, and managed to save the roof and outer walls, but the entire interior was damaged. Chief Frost, of the fire department, estimated the damage at approximately $800.

Men had been working digging a ditch near the house the day before, and it is thought that cigarettes or pipe ashes thrown by them may have set the place on fire. It is also possible that hoboes took refuge in the building, which has been vacant some time, and that a fire kindled by them started the blaze. After the firemen got through their work there was no evidence to show exactly how the flames had got their headway.
