

WAR IN SCHOOL

Pupils at Milwaukie Learn All About Blowing Up Ships

They have a pleasant and cute pastime in the Milwaukie school in the fourth grade. They teach the little boys and girls all about war.

At least the Courier is so informed by a bright little nine-year old youngster, who told all about it the other day. He is in a room where two classes are taught, and while the teacher is hearing one class the other one is allowed to go to the blackboard on rare and highly prized occasions and draw pictures. The teacher shows them how to draw the pictures. According to the little fellow's account, the thing goes this way:

"First the teacher takes some light yellow chalk and draws the ocean. She makes it yellow so you can see through it, just like water. Then she draws a battleship, and you can see the guns on it. She makes marks for the guns, and sometimes she makes smoke coming out of the end of them. Then she goes over to the other side of the ocean and draws a mine. The mine she makes with white chalk, and you can see it floating in the water. Then she moves the mine a little nearer to the ship by rubbing out the first mine and drawing another one. She keeps on doing this until the mine is right under the battleship, and then she takes the rubber and blows up the ship. She does this by smudging the whole ship drawing and rubbing up the yellow water as well, and that makes a big cloud of yellow-gray smoke where the battleship hit the mine. It is lots of fun, and sometimes she lets us draw the ship and the mines, too."

"Is there any flag on the ship," the lad was asked.

"Oh yes," continued the little shaver, "she draws a flag on it sometimes it is a white flag, and sometimes it is a red, white and blue flag with the stripes running up and down. A battleship always flies a flag."

"And how about the mines, son; do they have flags," the boy was asked further.

He grinned broadly. "Naw," he replied, "mines don't have flags on them; but we all know they are German mines!"

MAYBE IT ISN'T LAW

Sunday Closing Statute Said to have Been Repealed Years Ago

Judge Webster, Holmes, of Tillamook, says there is no such thing as a Sunday closing law in Oregon, and that the recent decision of the supreme court in regard to its being illegal to keep cigar stands open on the Sabbath isn't worth the paper upon which it is written.

"The Sunday closing law," he says, "was handed down from territorial days, under the provision of the state constitution, article 18, section 7, which provides 'all laws in force in the Territory of Oregon when this constitution takes effect and consistent therewith, shall continue in force until altered or repealed.' The Sunday closing law was included in the code of criminal procedure passed October 19, 1864. Two days later the same session repealed it by passing Senate bill 71, entitled 'An act to repeal all statutes of a general nature, with certain exceptions.'"

"Section 1 thereof provides as follows:

"That all statutes of a general nature passed or in force before the commencement of the session commencing September the eighth, A. D., 1862, except those enumerated and mentioned in the next section, be and the same are hereby repealed." Section 2, of said Senate bill 71, does not enumerate the Sunday closing law, nor does it refer to it in any manner. The Sunday closing law was therefore and thereby hereby repealed."

"There has been much ado about nothing for a good many years by the mistaken belief that we had a 'Sunday closing law' in Oregon."

The Judge referred to a case in Marion county where the law was attacked. Judge Bennett signed the writ of review from the Justice Court on July 25, 1904, and the case was tried before Judge Galloway, who reversed the case on the grounds set out that there was no Sunday closing law.

HOW IT WORKS

Campaign Ideas of Drys Brought Home To Roost

Little Ethel came running home from Sunday School this week, and leaping into her father's arms as he sat reading the papers, cried out: "Daddy, will you get me some beer?"

Little Ethel is five years old, and her father was somewhat surprised. He asked why his daughter wanted beer.

"Because," she answered, "teacher at Sunday school said if we drank beer things would look funny to us, and I'd like to see things look funny."

This reminded father of the words of J. Sanger Fox, eminent prohibitionist, who recently said that the prohibitionists started their campaign with the infants in Sunday school, and kept on hammering at it until the original infants became old enough to vote.

We now see how the prohibition campaign works out.

NEW UKASE ISSUED

Czar Jones, of County Seat, Says Nice Pavement Must Be Protected

Linn E. Jones, czar of Oregon City and sponsor for the famous Jones anti-booze law, which has resulted in the arrest of several farmers who were passing through the county seat on their way home with a family supply of wine, has issued another ukase. This one is to the effect that there must be no speeding of automobiles or bicycles upon the nice new Worwick pavement which now graces Main street.

NO CHILDREN IN THE MINES.

California Eliminates Children Under Sixteen From Mines and Quarries.

Among the new limits established by the California child labor law of 1915 is a sixteen year limit for mines and quarries. California has mining products valued at more than $83,000,000, according to the 1910 census, but she has never before set an age limit for the children who might be employed in their production.

Now that a sixteen year limit has been adopted, no fourteen or fifteen year old trapper boys will be found among the victims of an explosion, as was the case in West Virginia last year, nor will their thoughtlessness be the cause of disasters in which others are killed, as it sometimes is where boys under sixteen are permitted to work in mines.

Mining has the highest fatal accident rate of any industry, but quarrying is not far behind. A signal boy was crushed to death by a falling stone in a Maine quarry last fall. The occupation of signal boy is not generally supposed to be dangerous, but it is evident from this that any occupation in a quarry is unsafe for young boys and that a sixteen year limit is imperative. A number of mining states having both mines and quarries have adopted a sixteen year limit for mines only, forgetting that the dangers from falling stone and blasting make the presence of young boys in quarries a risk to be avoided.

California's action is regarded as particularly significant by the National Child Labor Committee in view of the "law of recurrence" which Dr. Felix Adler spoke about at the Eleventh Annual Conference on Child Labor. Dr. Adler said that the evils of child labor had followed industrial development from England to New York and Massachusetts, from there to the south and from the south would go to the west unless the west prevented it by enacting child labor laws in advance. Child labor in the mines will not "recur" in California.

FORESTALLING CHILD LABOR.

By FELIX ADLER.

The question is sometimes asked: "Why have a National Child Labor Committee? Why not have state committees and let these co-operate?" One sufficient answer to this is that the appearance of child labor in those states in which there is as yet little or no manufacturing must be forestalled, and a national committee is needed to this end. Anti-child labor laws must pre-empt the ground before a greedy industrialism can stretch forth its hands to grasp the child. The law of periodicity, the law of recurrence, that has hitherto obtained in the matter of child labor must be defeated. England began, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New York followed suit. The same ineluctable outgrowth of human feelings repeat themselves again and again. Whenever a predominantly agricultural community develops into an industrial stage the horrors exposed by Lord Shaftesbury tend to recur. Mankind does not readily learn by experience. The warning lessons of the past are often writ in water. Thus the industrial states of the north simply stepped into the foul footsteps of early English capitalism, and the south, as soon as it became industrial, hastened to repeat the same doleful story. The great states of the Pacific and the west must thwart that horrible law and make it impossible that the same conditions should there grow up. That is the one main object of a national committee.

THE CHILDREN'S CRY.

I said: "I am poor this year, and the war is hard. I cannot give to the things I love to do. So this must go, and this, in the great discard. And the children must suffer, too. I am much afraid."

But I didn't know how they cry in the night. And I didn't know how they cry in the day. How they cry with the voice of your heart's delight. And the faces your dead have worn.

There are boys that work all night in the crystal mines. There are girls who spin all day at the whirling wheels. And how shall I face my dead with my broken trust. When the "insomuch as ye did it not" reveals?

I couldn't bear their cry in the night. The clutch of their little hands. I must do my best with the widow's mite To loosen the iron bands. —L. B.

School Plan Lost

Last week's election on the establishment of a union high school district for Gladstone and Parkplace was lost through the action of Parkplace voters, who rejected the plan 45 to 34. Gladstone voted in favor of it, 87 to 21. As a result of the election, which virtually puts an end to the effort to establish a high school at Gladstone upon land offered by Harvey Cross, many of the children in the two districts will attend the Oregon City high school.

SUGGESTION OFFERED

Correspondent Would Like To See "Something New," He Says

Editor Courier: Pardon what may seem like impudence on my part; but believe me that it is not that—only interest in the success of your paper, which I enjoy reading every week. With this foreword I would like to make a suggestion, and that is, let us have something new in the Courier in the line of a weekly feature. Not that I want to complain at the bill of fare you offer us, but merely that the Wolf Howls! I would suggest a change—as the man at the boarding house said when he asked the landlady to give him goulash instead of corn beef hash.

For instance, it appears to me that the "Wolf Howls" have nearly answered their purpose—and I know by reading them that the mysterious "wolf" who writes them is tired of the job. This I know not by the quality of the "howls," but because the "wolf" has said so. Hence I would like to see something new take the place of the Wolf Howls, something that is not so similar to the "columns" conducted by Rex Lampan, Dean Collins, and Luke McGuire.

I remember being much interested in a department of another paper that I formerly read—a department headed "Lay Sermons." The title of the department was sufficiently broad to admit of humor, satire and some sound philosophy; and it seems to me the idea might well be copied in your excellent sheet. If this idea seems fitting to you, I should be overjoyed to see you try it out—even as the people in a small village go to church every time there is a new minister, just to see what he will do.

Pray believe, once more, that in making this suggestion I am doing it only because of my interest in the Courier, and because "funny columns" these days have become such a common thing that even the best of them lack that sparkling originality that your paper ought to have. If you will take this suggestion in good part, and not think I am finding fault, I shall be much pleased; and hoping you will do this, I beg to subscribe myself,

HAVE MANY FRIENDS

New Era Couple Remembered by Large Number of Acquaintances

Mr. and Mrs. David McArthur, of New Era, who on September 12 celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, appear to be among the most popular folk in the county. At least this is the view the Courier holds, as it received last week no less than four "write-ups" of the celebration held at the home of the aged couple. The first one that came to hand was utilized in these columns, but the Courier is grateful to those other friends of Mr. and Mrs. McArthur who were kind enough to send in news of the interesting event at their home.

Aside from these contributions, the following poem dealing with the happy occasion was sent in by Mrs. T. L. Brown, of Oregon City, and it is a pleasure for the Courier to print it.

Golden Wedding

Bells are rung and feasts are spread

When the gay young man and maiden wed.

But much more loudly should they chime, And jingle in true measured rhyme On these two hearts who here today, For fifty years have walked along the way.

For fifty years—how long it seems—To youthful hearts who in fancy dream Of future hopes and joys combined; That coming years for them will find. For fifty years along life's way, Of sunshine and clouds to perfect day.

These two have journeyed down the span, Beyond the span given to man.

For them the song birds of life's spring, Long, long ago have ceased to sing. Their Summers faded, Autumn, too, Their locks once showne in darker hue.

But Winter's blast have turned it white, But they are lovers yet tonight. Fate wove for them, in fortune's loom, This warp of sunshine; warp of gloom.

A checkered fabric, yet we see Nowhere a thread of inconstancy.

The past for them holds some regret, For us poor mortals never yet Live out our three-score years and ten. But what we sigh "It might have been."

But they, who live as man and wife, For 50 years a blameless life. Can have but little to condemn. In their past lives to sadden them. Then let us all wish them joy, And hope the future has no alloy To damp the ardor of the cheer Of all who now are gathered here.

MAY GET TIMBER

Government is Liberal with Material Needed by Settlers

According to statistics just compiled by the Forest Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, approximately 128,952,000 feet of timber was cut on the Forests of Oregon, Washington and Alaska. Besides this, 14,493,000 feet was given, under free use permit, to settlers and others living in or near the National Forests. The amount of timber given away in Oregon was 12,122,000 feet, most of which was taken by settlers in or near the Minam, Umatilla and Wenaha Forests in eastern Oregon. In Washington the amount of timber taken under free use was 2,371,000 feet, the settlers in the vicinity of the Okanogan forest taking the largest portion, or nearly 30 percent.

The statement also shows that the Forests of Alaska are furnishing a large amount of timber for local consumption. More than 37,000,000 feet, according to the Forest Service, was cut under sales contracts during the fiscal year in the two Alaska Forests, and it is estimated that the quantity taken under free use permit, amounts to at least ten percent of the quantity cut under sales. No figures are available on the Alaska free use, however, as residents of the Territory are allowed on account of relative sparsity of population, to take all the timber they need for personal use without going through any formalities.

LEVIATHAN IS SIGHTED

Mountain View Almost Indulges in Whale Hunt Early in Week

This story may be painful to a certain man in this town, so names will be carefully omitted from it. In fact the man most concerned has offered to lick the editor if his name is mentioned. The man with this mean disposition has a large automobile, about the size of a mastodon, and he is desirous of selling it. Early this week he caught a prospective customer and took him out for a demonstration.

All went merry as a marriage bell until the auto, the salesman and the prospective customer reached the general neighborhood of Mt. Pleasant, and then the mastadonic auto, feeling pained in its internal economy, stopped with a grunt. The salesman got out, lifted up the engine-hood and started to unscrew the carburetor and tighten up the differential, when suddenly the radiator cap flew off, and the machine spouted a stream of boiling water eight feet into the air.

"Geel! Look at the whale!" exclaimed an appreciative small boy, who was watching the proceedings.

"Where are you going with that thing," asked a bystander.

Judge Siever's friend, who was running the mastodon, answered nonchalantly that when it cooled off a bit he was going to the coast with it.

"Well," said the bystander, "you're on the road to Molalla right now; but that's all right. If you went to the coast with that somebody would shove a harpoon in it and then go looking for blubber."

A WORTH-WHILE GIRL

Didn't Care Where the Alps Were In Her Graduating Essay

An Idaho girl graduate was given the theme "Beyond the Alps Lies Italy" and here is what she did to it. Too bad she doesn't live in Oregon:

"I do not care a cent whether Italy lies beyond the Alps or in Idaho. I do not expect to set the river on fire with my future career; I am glad that I have a good education, but I am not going to misuse it by writing poetry or essays on the future woman. It will enable me to correct the grammar of any lover I may have should he speak of 'dorgs' in my presence or 'seen a man.' It may come handy when I want to figure out how many pounds of soap a woman can get for three dozen eggs at the grocery. So I do not begrudge the time I spent in acquiring it. But my ambitions do not fly so high.

"I just want to marry a man who can lick anybody of his weight in the township, who can run an 80-acre farm, and who has no female relatives to come around and boss the ranch. SPECIAL FAVORS TO TENNESSEE CANNERS

Amendment to Child Labor Law Passed This Year.

NEED FOR A FEDERAL LAW.

An effort made in New York last winter to grant canneries special favors by permitting them to work their operatives longer hours was strongly condemned by the press throughout the country, and the attempt failed. But no attention was paid to Tennessee when she did the same thing at about the same time. In fact, the National Child Labor Committee regards the Tennessee amendment as far more serious than the New York one would have been since the change in the New York law would not have affected any children under sixteen, while the Tennessee amendment permits children under fourteen to work in canneries and for unlimited hours per day.

"It is strange how many states fail to realize that children are more valuable than fruits and vegetables," said Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, in commenting on Tennessee's action. "The idea is so common that canning goods is more important than protecting children that we find not only Tennessee, but Delaware, Maryland, Indiana, Maine and Virginia, making special exemptions to their child labor laws for the benefit of canneries, while Mississippi does not regulate them at all. I do not know why the idea should prevail that employment in canneries cannot possibly be harmful to children when the conditions there are usually worse than in factories."

"We feel that the only successful way to meet the cannery situation is through the federal law which will be introduced in the next congress and which, if passed, would prohibit the shipment outside the state of canned goods which children under fourteen had helped to manufacture or on which they had worked more than eight hours a day. A letter came to us the other day from a woman who wished to know what variety of canned goods she could buy and feel sure that no children had worked on it. We could not tell her, but we did tell her that if she would help us in passing a federal law she could buy any kind of canned goods with safety."

MESSSENGER SERVICE A "CRIME FACTORY."

So Lewis W. Hine Tells Child Labor Conference.

"Crime factory" is the term which an investigator for the National Child Labor Committee made use of in describing the evils of the messenger service at the Eleventh Annual Conference on Child Labor. This man, Lewis W. Hine, believes that there is not a messenger boy of any experience who does not know more about the underworld than the average citizen, because one very common phase of messenger work is the serving of prostitutes by carrying messages, running errands and procuring dope. Investigations of the night messenger service during the past five years in cities representing every section of the country

THE PRODUCT OF THE "CRIME FACTORY," have failed to reveal a single night messenger whose work had not brought him into personal contact with vice.

The chances of promotion in the messenger service were summed up by one boy as follows: "Nothing to it unless you are the right kind of guy. You can get to be a check boy or a file clerk after being in the service a year or two if you stick to it, but ordinarily nobody wants to stick. . . . There is nothing to do when we're not on calls. You can go into the office and sit down and loaf, or you can go outside and stand up and loaf. In our office the manager never cared what became of you as long as you were within calling distance."

The attitude of other employers toward the boy who has worked as a messenger was brought out last winter by Miss Anne Davis of Chicago at a hearing on the proposed Illinois child labor law, which included a twenty-one year limit for night messengers. "Employers tell me," said Miss Davis, "they always specify that a boy shall not have worked as a messenger when they employ him."

Gypsy Is Pursued

Charged with having stolen 15 cents from an Austrian in Hillsboro, a band of gypsies en route to the county fair at Canby were overhauled this week in Wilsonville by deputy sheriffs from the Washington county metropolis, and one of their number placed under arrest and taken back to the county seat. To recover the 15 cents and punish the alleged thief will cost Washington county considerable coin, but officials there say that justice must be dealt out no matter what it costs.

FARM DISPLAYS ASKED

Portland Land Show in November to Offer Valuable Prizes

If you believe that you can produce the best individual farm exhibit in Oregon, get busy, assemble your products and bring them to Portland for display at the Manufacturers' & Land Products Show, October 25 to November 13. If you are awarded the first prize you receive your choice of a silver cup, $50.00 in cash, a 1000 bushel Armo grain bin or a 750 gallon Armo water tank. The second prize will be $25.00 in cash or an Armo water trough.

Individual farm exhibits are a feature of many county fairs throughout the state this year and some interesting displays will be entered in competition at the Portland Show.

August Bergren Weds

The marriage of Mrs. Lillian Glenn and August Bergren, both of Oregon City, was announced by the happy couple last week after they returned from a visit to Stevenson, Washington, where the ceremony was performed. Mrs. Bergren is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Miles; while Mr. Bergren is favorably known as one of the most enterprising livery men in the county seat.
