THE FASHIONS

Our modern housewife, be she bride or matron, does not prepare breakfast in a be-ribboned and be-ruffled morning robe, or dinner in a passe afternoon frock. She delights in her trim morning dress, with open throat, short skirt and sleeves, developed in some fresh material which may be tubbed every Monday morning. Her hair is drawn back daintily and becomingly, and often confined under a cap of the same material as the house dress, to protect the hair from dust or cooking odors.

The Material of the Housedress

Gingham, chambray and percale are the staple fabrics for these dresses, but someone who desired to simplify matters still further, decided that plain white soiled no quicker than starched gingham or chambray; that soft, white cotton crepe, which washes so easily, requires no ironing, does not wrinkle, and is fresher looking, was more practical for these dresses than the old-time fabrics which require starch and careful laundering. Of course, many an old-time housewife laughed at the idea and considered the very thought of housework in white ridiculous, but many have taken it up and find cotton crepe in some conventionalized design, is attractive, too, and there are a number of other wash fabrics, thin-duck, for instance, that are used.

Pockets and Trimmings

Large, roomy pockets are features of both dresses and aprons. They come in very handy for carrying a dust cloth, a short handled duster or whisk broom, a pair of shears, or some other article to be used on various times during the morning; besides being useful, they break the severity of the dress and render it more becoming.

Buttons are used to trim these dresses too; but they must be a washable button—bone or crocheted. Pearl buttons, which are not removable, are apt to break when the garment is laundered. The large pearl or bone buttons, however, the shanks of which may be slipped through buttonholed eyelets, secured with a bar, and removed when the frock goes to the tub, are the height of the practical. The skirt, which unbuttons from belt to hem and may be laid out flat on the ironing board, is another happy notion.

Another way to brighten the house dress without making it fussy is to pipe the neck edge, armhole, cuffs, down the front and around the pockets with a contrasting bias tape. This comes in linen or cotton, in many attractive colorings; also in stripes and checks, and makes most effective trimming for both dresses and aprons also for children's wash dresses. It may be purchased by the piece, comes folded, ready for use, and being bias, may be applied readily to armholes and neck edges.

whether in pure white, or patterned in color, a most satisfactory and practical material for the workdress.

Popularity of the Smock

The gardening fad, which took a strong hold upon the fancy of the city dweller and the suburbanite, this summer, was responsible for the introduction of the smock. It has become decidedly popular with housekeepers and promises to find a permanent place in the wardrobe. These smocks are fashioned of dark blue linen, chambray, duck and similar materials, often trimmed with smocking in contrasting thread. They are especially practical to slip on over an afternoon frock when there is some slight task to be performed which might possibly result in a spot or stain on the gown. The woman who delights in regilding a picture frame, or brightening up a piece of furniture, will also find them convenient, as they are generally made up in a somewhat heavier material than the regulation apron, and therefore, offer more protection.

Big Steer to be Shown

It is not improbable that Oregon will show here the largest steer in captivity at the Panama Fair. This is a 3,000 pounder that grew up in the Klamath country. The animal is six years old, and is range fed only, never having been in a stall. George Watt, the owner, proposed to enter the big fellow for a prize, but there is no class for anything beyond three-year-olds. It is now proposed to bring the old boy down as a part of the Oregon exhibit, with headquarters in the game pavilion adjoining the Oregon building. Even a picture of the animal in the Klamath booth attracts considerable attention, and the real thing on display is certain to prove a winner.

FAITH EXTOLLED

free." He also explained that His works were the works of God, and that of Himself He could do nothing. These utterances repudiated the notion that His works could only be accomplished because of the greater power residing in His personality as the son of God. His words show that Jesus regarded the works in overcoming sin and sickness as capable of being done according to the divine laws which govern us. These laws are the same now as they were nineteen centuries ago. The statement made sometimes as an attempted excuse for disobedience to the command to heal the sick according to the Christ example, that the days of the miracles have passed, is without any Scriptural authority whatever. That statement was first made about the beginning of the fourth century, when the pagan dogma of the divine origin of sickness and death had found its first place in Christianity, introduced by the multitudes of Greek and Roman converts about that time. Those Greeks and Romans had believed that there are evil deities and that they send sickness, death, and other ills upon mankind. The result of this dogma of the deific origin of physical disorders has been the failure to heal the sick as Jesus taught for about fifteen centuries, until Christian Science denied and refuted the dogma. Jesus, when he taught and proved by His works that the truth makes us free, showed us that from His viewpoint neither sin nor sickness were the truth of man's being, and that therefore they were not of divine causation but human in their origin. For Jesus could not have meant to heal the sick according to the Christian way therefore who believe that sickness and death are "mysterious dispensations of divine Providence." The early Christians were able to heal the sick as Jesus promised until the pagan dogma which has been described, found its way into Christian theology.

Many questions are asked nowadays in respect to the process by which the sick are healed in Christian Science. How is it done? If you can understand or explain how Jesus and His followers have overcome sin, you thereby answer how Jesus and His followers overcome sickness; for Jesus employed the self-same process to overcome all mental and physical disorders, as the Bible shows. If a fact is once fully proven then similar facts can no longer be rejected as impossible or improbable. Any failure to comprehend a proven and established fact or process does not tend to invalidate or falsify such fact or process. The supremacy of the mind over the body is constantly to be observed. Solomon said that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he." Paul said, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Our thoughts affect our breathing, our nerves, the circulation of the blood, in brief, all the bodily functions and activities—our good thoughts to better them and our bad thoughts to harm them. The truth delivers us from the bondage of our bad thinking. Falsehood surely cannot free us, for we know that falsehood only forges and rivets our chains. Truth is the sole remedy, and therefore the best and most dependable resource. One of the immediate apostles of Jesus said: "The prayer of faith shall save the sick." These words show the way of reaching and attaining the truth which delivers us. Prayer brings us nearer to divine Truth—indeed, it is the only effectual way known to human experience. It is true, as Tennyson wrote:

"More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of."

Prayer is communing with divine truth, and thereby we assimilate more than in any other way the truth which frees and saves. Prayer is a mental and not a physical attitude. Prayer is to change and better man; that can be done. Prayer is not to change or better God's ways or program; that, of course, cannot be done. Jesus admonished not to pray amiss. Also, he promised us that true prayer is always answered.

We pray amiss, and words are naught; But when we rightly pray,
Men cannot measure with their thought
The wonders of God's way.

First count the myriad stars on high,
Proud man, before you dare,
With all your vaunted tools, to try
To map the realm of prayer.

GREAT FILM COMING

"The Escape," to be Shown at Grand Teaches Big Lesson

"The Escape," one of the most remarkable feature films of the age, will be shown at the Grand theatre, Oregon City, Friday and Saturday, and should be seen by every person who is interested in the advancement of the human race. The play deals

The acting in this play must have the highest commendation. Miss Mae Marsh personifies the victim of heredity. In the quietest manner possible to conceive she conveys the deep ethos of her fate and suffers to the end with the spirit of a martyr who is entirely unaware of her heroism. Blanche Sweet, better known as an actress, also fights the fates with modest, womanly patience, a darkened with the basic reasons that lie behind the "modern failure of marriage" as it is oftentimes called, and hammer home a lesson that is far-reaching in its seriousness.

Aside from the scientific importance of this production there is a wonderfully impressive and vital life story. Mr. Griffith had his heart in this photo demonstration of human difficulties and the sad results of neglect and ignorance that govern in the sense world of struggling mortals.

soul awakened to the importance of a woman's place in the world. Robert Herron, the poor brain-wounded brother, has really created a character pathetically powerful in its helplessness. Owen Moore and others in the cast are selected evidently for their natural aptitude for the style of work cut out for them. It is directed with the care and feeling of a master drama, artistic in every detail—a telling plea for higher and cleaner methods in social government.

REPUBLICANS AT SEA

please the opponents of the present national administration. Here we have the Oregon City Enterprise "roasting" President Wilson for driving "war orders" out of the country, in the following editorial:

"Some time ago it was announced that Charles Schwab was about to fill orders for submarines and boats for the allies, in this country such pressure was brought to bear on him by the administration and the peace propagandists that Mr. Schwab decided to change his plans. We now learn that the Electric Boat Co., in which Schwab is interested, has contracted to build 550 high-powered gasoline launches at $40,000 each, and these boats are to be constructed in Halifax. Thus a contract calling for $22,000,000 is to be filled outside the United States, and not part thereof will go to America labor. Moreover, had this contract been carried out in the United States we would soon have the machinery and the capacity to turn out submarines and submarine antagonists—the purpose for which these launches are to be used—greater than that of any other country in all the world. This is another illustration of the administration's shortsightedness."

"Then the Medford Sun, an organ of the same political party, lambasts the president for catering to the war business in the interests of the allies. The Sun says:

"All in all President Wilson's attitude toward the European war has been the greatest achievement of his administration, but it is foolish to claim that the rights of humanity have been put above all other considerations. President Wilson has put the right of American business to profit from the foreign conflict above the human right of putting an end to it. No well informed person believes for a moment that the war would continue without the financial and material support of this country. Looking at the situation then from the standpoint of civilization and humanity, alone, an embargo against arms would be essential to any consistent stand, in this direction. President Wilson, however, holds that such an embargo would under the circumstances constitute an unequal act, that it would deprive England of an advantage her sea power justifies, he undoubtedly has the support of a vast majority of the American people."

"Now just what is a poor president to do with the newspapers of this constituency so widely divergent in their views of what he ought to do? Probably his plan of saying nothing and sawing wood will best satisfy the great mass of the American people who occupy the plane between these two partisan extremes."
