WEIRD TALE OF TRACKING OF
BOLD, BAD MAN IS TOLD IN SUNDAY PAPERS

MR. WILSON IN HERO'S ROLE

What Really Happened at Milwaukie
Seems Radically Different to
Lurid Version in Press

Last Friday night James Taylor was arrested in Milwaukie.

Saturday's morning papers and the afternoon dailies of the same date contained highly exciting narratives dealing with this capture, and after reading them the average person gathered the impression that Mr. Wilson, who works in the sheriff's office with Mr. Hackett, had single-handedly captured the most ferocious and dangerous bandit since the late and lamented John Austin Hooper, the ice-cream eating marvel, had been gathered into the toils of the law.

"After months of quiet work, including six weeks in watching a shack on the river bank half a mile south of Milwaukie," said the Enterprise, Mr. Wilson caught the man "believed to be responsible" for all the street robberies and hold-ups that have occurred in this section since former Sheriff E. T. Mass turned the destinies of the county over to his successor. Saturday's Journal repeated the tale, and added thrilling incidents about the manner in which Mr. Wilson had bravely poured nitroglycerine "soup" into the Willamette river, winding up with his sigh of relief as the risky work was done. Taken altogether they were fine stories, and the busy young men who wrote them ought to cease newspaper work and take up writing fiction for the dime-novel weeklies.

Monday morning there appeared at the Courier office a delegation of Milwaukie citizens. The citizens said that the papers had done them a great injustice, and they seemed all to believe that Mr. Wilson, who ornaments the sheriff's office at times, had personally done them a great wrong. One member of the delegation was William Doyle, who bosses the log-boom near Island.

This Mr. Doyle admits modestly that his father is the man directly responsible for the capture of Taylor. And Mr. Doyle poured the nitroglycerine "soup" into the Willamette river; and when he did it Mr. Wilson was 200 feet away, safely under cover of the wooded river bank. With Mr. Wilson at the time was L. L. Gray, a retired farmer of Milwaukie, and also one D. E. Frost, constable of the Oregon City district.

According to Mr. Gray two men, known generally by the names "Slim" and "Shorty," live in a shack on the bank of the Willamette. "Slim" once in a while works at the mill, under Doyle, and occasionally Taylor comes to visit "Slim" and "Shorty" and stays with them for brief periods. "Slim" finally got the idea that Taylor was a high-class crook of some variety and told Doyle, and Doyle watched him. One day "Slim" told Doyle that Taylor was visiting him again, and Doyle took it upon himself to watch the stranger.

One afternoon he saw Doyle leave the shack with a bundle under his arm and go into the brush, and shortly afterwards he returned empty-handed. Then he departed for parts unknown. Doyle was just curious enough to look for the stuff that Taylor had hidden, and after looking for three days he found a bottle of nitroglycerine "soup," a drill, some keys and a few other things hidden under a rock. Later "Slim" sold Gray an automatic revolver for fifty cents, and said Taylor had given him the gun.

Doyle kept his own counsel until Taylor returned to the shack on another visit, and then he and a few Milwaukie citizens went down to look the stranger up. Taylor gracefully disappeared from sight, but the citizens kept on looking for him. While they were looking a couple of railroad sleuths joined the party. They looked till they got tired, and it then being evening they thought they'd call up the sheriff, believing that he might bring a posse down with him. This was last Friday, and the first the sheriff knew of the activity of Milwaukie people, was when they telephoned him.

Mr. Wilson went down to Milwaukie and while walking up the railroad track to meet the party, a stranger came down the track, stepped under the trestle, and was there apprehended by one of the railroad detectives who told him he was under arrest. The stranger was Taylor, and he laughed and said:

"Sure I'll go with you, if you say so. But what do you want me for? You haven't got anything on me." Taylor and the special officer then came up onto the track, and at the same time Mr. Wilson came to life, rushed up and declared that the man

ANOTHER PASTOR WORKS

Rev. W. T. Milliken Follows in Foot-Steps of Dr. G. N. Edwards

Every since the Rev. George Nelson Edwards, of the Congregational church, earned one day's bread by the sweat of his brow in a harvest field near the coast, Oregon City pastors have been seeking some method of equalling Dr. Edwards' feat. To date only one other minister has qualified to get in the "working class," and that one is the Rev. W. T. Milliken, whose hands are nicely calloused and nicked.

Dr. Milliken could not find a harvest field wherein to labor, and hopping was over when he got the hunch that it might be good for him to become a toiler. His acre or so, over back of Gladstone, which he has cleared and grubbed himself, needed no further attention; so he had to turn to carpentering. In the course of repairs at the First Baptist church, over which Dr. Milliken presides, his study was generally upset and remodeled; and this gave the good preacher the opportunity he sought.

So acquiring some boards, a hammer, a pound of nails and some glue, Dr. Milliken went to work. After some days of arduous labor he constructed bookcases and desks and cubby-holes as he wanted them, and then he proudly displayed the proofs of his toil. Said proofs consist of four callouses on one hand, three on the other, a partly sawed finger, and several raw spots on the digits of his left hand where he absent-mindedly let the hammer drop when he was aiming at a nail-head but thinking of higher things.

Dr. Milliken says that carpenter work interests him immensely, and after his experience with it he has a deeper sympathy with the humble Carpenter of Galilee than he ever had before.

DR. FORD HONORED

Members of Congregation Bid Farewell to Pastor and Present Gifts

Members of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal church crowded the auditorium of the historic structure at Seventh and Main streets Tuesday evening to take formal farewell of their pastor, the Rev. T. B. Ford, who for many years has been shepherd of the local flock. Congratulations on Dr. Ford's promotion in church work were made in speeches by the Rev. George Nelson Edwards, the Rev. Wiersiek, B. N. Hicks, Roy B. Cox and others, and a splendid musical program was given. Dr. Ford thanked his friends for their good wishes in a few well chosen words.

In the course of the evening Dr. Ford was presented with a handsome traveling bag, the gift of the Hon. Geo. Brownell, and with a magnificent signet ring by his congregation. Mrs. Ford was also remembered by the ladies of the church, who presented her with a beautiful silver jelly spoon.

TROUBLE OVER NAME

Ex-Sheriff Mass Has Fine Title for His Hotel and Restaurant, but—

E. T. Mass, recently sheriff of this county, and now owner of the Brunswick hotel and restaurant on Main street, Oregon City, is going to re-name the place when he opens it after the $7,000 worth of repairs and alterations have been made. The ex-sheriff says that the hotel and restaurant will be tip-top in every way when he gets ready for patronage; and he wants to have a tip-top name for it, too.

Several names have been suggested to the doughty ex-sheriff, who is a democrat through and through, but the name he likes best is of his own choosing.

"I'd like best of all to call it the 'Wilsonian,' in honor of our great and noble president," says Mr. Mass. "Maybe I will name it that, anyway. But you see our president isn't the only man named Wilson—and I'd hate to have people misunderstand my motives in picking that name."

County Court Allows Use of Bridge For Main for Water Supply

After considerable discussion of the application, the county court last week gave the city of West Linn a franchise to lay a water main over the suspension bridge. In return West Linn will place three hydrants on the bridge for use in case of fire, and for flushing the structure off.

The county court at first asked that West Linn supply the courthouse with water free in return for the franchise, but West Linn's contract with Oregon City, from whom it will get its water, provides that it must not have any water customers outside of the corporate limits of the mill city.

Osborne Is Married

After Justice of the Peace Sievers, County Judge Anderson and the Rev. J. R. Landsborough had refused to perform the ceremony, A. A. Osborne and Minnie Raymond were married Tuesday by Father A. Hillebrand, of St. John's Catholic church. Osborne was recently arrested on complaint of the Raymond woman, who charged him with threatening to kill her. Although held to the grand jury, District Attorney Hedges has released Osborne on his recognizance, so that he may prove up on a government claim for himself and family.

UNCLE SAM PAYS MUCH FOR ARMOR

PURCHASE PRICE IS NEARLY DOUBLE ESTIMATE OF ESTIMATED COST

FOREIGNERS GET LOW PRICE

Manipulation of Prices to Extort Unreasonable Profit from American Shown by Official Figures

Continuing his discussion of preparedness for war, and pointing out the methods by which the United States has been robbed of millions of dollars by the "war trust," Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner, of Illinois, this week gives Courier readers some more interesting information as to the methods of the munitions ring. Mr. Tavenner says:

"It would require several volumes to cover all the transactions deserving publicity concerning armor. Let it be sufficient in passing to say that the Government purchase of armor has been a scandal from start to finish. The conduct of the armor ring in dealing with the Government averages throughout at least 80 per cent rotten."

There have been nine official estimates as to the actual cost of the manufacture of a ton of armor plate. The average estimate is $247.17 per ton. Yet since 1887 we have purchased 217,379 tons of armor, paying the armor ring an average of $440.04 per ton, or a total of $95,656,240. I believe I am well within the bounds of conservatism when I say that if all this armor had been manufactured in a Government plant at least $35,000,000 would have been saved to the American taxpayers, and armor is only one of the things being purchased by the Army and Navy under similar conditions.

"Take powder. We have purchased $25,000,000 worth of powder from the trust since 1905, paying for it all the way from 53 cents to 80 cents per pound. We are manufacturing powder in Government plants now for 36 cents per pound, and the officers in charge state that the more we manufacture the cheaper we can produce it. There is little doubt but that from eight to ten million dollars of the twenty-five million dollars paid the Powder Trust could have been saved by Government manufacture. Secretary Daniels has asked Congress for an appropriation for a Government armor-plate factory, but thus far Congress has refused him."

"If the Government builds an armor plant and a padlock is placed on its doors as soon as it is completed, and it is never used, it will, in the opinion of Secretary Daniels, pay for itself simply by enabling him to obtain fair treatment from the armor manufacturers."

"Army and Navy officers generally are opposed to complete Government manufacture of munitions of war, taking the position that it is the part of wisdom for the Government to encourage private manufacturers to operate plants so that they may be available in time of war. Experience has shown, however, that instead of patriotically coming to the relief of the Government in time of war, the war traders take advantage of the necessities of the Government, which is at their mercy, and boost their prices. For instance, when war with Spain was imminent the armor manufacturers practically issued an ultimatum to the Government that they would not manufacture a single piece of armor plate unless the Government should agree to pay them $100 more a ton than the price fixed by Congress after an investigation as a fair price. And it is also worthy of notice that their patriotism did not prevent them from selling armor to Russia for $249 a ton, while they were asking their own government $616 a ton."

"If the Armor and Powder trusts once overcharge the Government in time of war because they have it at their mercy it is their fault, but if they repeat the performance because they are a second time permitted to have the Government at their mercy, it will be the Government's fault."

"Every man who opposes war and favors peace can support a policy of Government manufacture, because as long as these hydra-headed capitalistic cliques thrive and fatten on international distrust and suspicion remain in our midst we are in danger, not so much from the peoples beyond the seas as from the war traders at home, who, if permitted to ply their trade to its final analysis, will lead us to the very brink of desolation and then, to satisfy their sordid greed of gold, plunge us into the bottomless abyss of war itself."

"Permit me here to quote the words of Minority Leader Oscar W. Underwood, uttered in the debate in the Naval Bill in the House on February 5, 1915:

"I believe we ought to have a reasonable Navy and a reasonable Army, but I do not want to see my country have either a Navy or an Army that will invite us to make issues that may precipitate our people

ACTOR TACKLES STEER

Oregon City Footlight Favorite Has Adventures at Pendleton

PENDLETON, Or., Sept. 30: (By Special Greased Wire)—During the recent Round Up festivities held here a prize of ten dollars was offered to any person who could successfully hold a wild steer by a rope attached to one of its horns. This prize offer is an annual affair, and is only open to non-professional cow-punchers. When the offer was made this year many people tried their luck, but the prize went uncaptured as usual.

Among those who attempted to subdue the ferocious animal this year was Lloyd Riches, the eminent tragedian of Oregon City, Oregon. Mr. Riches jumped lithely into the arena, his low-cut collar showing the heaving muscles of his massive chest; and like a gladiator of ancient Rome he took firm grip upon the rope that was attached to one of the spreading horns of the steer. Amazed at the size of the man who was attempting to overcome his brute strength the steer looked at Mr. Riches in a dazed way for some minutes, while the stalwart thespian dragged lustily upon the hempen bond that joined mind and matter.

Finally recovering from his amazement, the steer jerked his head quickly, dragging the elegant Mr. Riches in the Pendleton dust, and then to show his utter contempt for the historic star, calmly walked over his prostrate form. Mr. Riches let go of the rope as soon as possible, and was only dragged about 40 feet in the arena. This was sufficient, however, to somewhat mar his appearance, and the multitude in the grand stand howled with fiendish glee.

Deputy County Assessor Fred Johnston, who was at Pendleton at the time, says that the incident recounted above was the funniest thing he ever saw.

DEER COMES TO TOWN

Animal Lives Till It Gets Within Mile of City, Then Meets Bullet

Force of habit, transmitted down through many generations, proved fatal to a deer that Monday wandered down from the hills, coming thru the draw between the Abernethy and the Clackamas rivers, and which evidently intended to swim the Willamette and go over to the Coast range. The deer got as far as the edge of the China gardens, north of the county seat, when Ivan Rittenhouse saw it. Ivan got a gun, and when the deer was dressed it tipped the scales at about a hundred pounds.

Old timers say that before Oregon City's activity frightened all the deer away that the animals used to come down as did this one, swim the river, and range westward into the hills near the coast. The deer that met Ivan's bullet evidently had the same idea in his head, but did not take into consideration the changes that had come in this neighborhood since its ancestors used the old runway.

IS JONATHAN GONE?

Mr. Bourne's Purchase of an "Estate" in the South Causes Wonder

Recently the daily press printed an item saying that Jonathan Bourne, who used to be Oregon's active representative at Washington, D. C., has purchased an estate or plantation in South Carolina. The dispatches continued to the effect that Jonathan would soon erect a bungalow for the hired help, and that later "two magnificent residences would be built."

Of course it may puzzle some why Jonathan wants two houses, but may be he is going to rent one. And politicians are also wondering whether Jonathan's "Oregon residence"—which is a room at the Portland hotel—will also be for rent soon. Maybe Brother Jonathan thinks that South Carolina needs a senator worse than Oregon does.

And what a compliment it is to fertile and productive Oregon to have Jonathan buy a plantation in South Carolina—when he never bought overmuch here.

JURY HEARS SUIT

Only Nominal Damages Allowed Park Lessee for Railroad Land

In circuit court last week a jury before Judge J. U. Campbell allowed the lessee of Crystal Lake Park, Milwaukie, $150 for the "damage" done the premises by the Carver line. Ten thousand dollars was asked in the suit.

Testimony was introduced tending to show that the advent of the railroad would be of much benefit to the park, as it would make it accessible to many Portland and other visitors. The Carver line offered the park people $150 for its right-of-way, and as the jury found for no more, the plaintiff will have to pay the costs of the litigation.

Councilman Henry M. Templeton, city lawn-mower sharpener, returned to his home in Oregon City this week after a hunting and fishing trip near Molalla.

Into the cauldron of bloodshed and disaster. I believe that if you propose to enter into a race of armaments the end of the story will mean war."

RANGE OF DISPLAY ASTOUNDS

After Seeing Showing of Crops and Stock, Visitors Realize That Clackamas Leads Valley

The closing of the 1915 Clackamas County Fair, held at Canby marked one of the most successful, if not the most successful season ever enjoyed by the Clackamas County Fair Association, and great credit is due the officers and board for its success, as well as the people of Clackamas county who greatly assisted in making it such a successful affair. The merchants of Oregon City, who closed their business houses on Tuesday to take in the fair and to allow their employees the same privilege, showed their loyalty towards the county, and this act was greatly appreciated by the fair association.

The horse races this year were the best that have ever been witnessed on the track at Canby, and much credit is due to Ed Fortune, who had charge, for securing racing horses. Every horse was up to standard, and from the starting of the races until the finish the spectators were enthusiastic.

The large pavilion never looked more attractive than this year. With the decorations of the National colors, displays of fruits, grains, grasses, vegetables, needlework and art, gave to the fair visitors as to what the county of Clackamas can produce. Individual farm exhibits, granges, community organizations helped to a large degree in making this pavilion attractive.

Among the individual farm exhibits that attracted no little attention were those of J. C. Kaupisch, of Canby; Avon Jesse, of Canby; George De Bok, of Oregon City, and E. M. Haines. Mr. Kaupisch, who owns a half block of land in Canby, showed what could be produced on that amount of land, and although his booth was filled to capacity with the finest of vegetables, fruits as well as household articles prepared by his wife, there was a large amount of produce remaining at his home, there being no available space to accommodate this in the booth. In this collection there ranged from a pound of the best of country butter and straw berries to a flock of China pheasants that were raised by Mr. Kaupisch. Even the brooder, heated by electricity was seen, and several small birds were comfortably installed. The mother and father bird were visitors at the fair, and hundreds of people took advantage of this treat in seeing a family of China pheasants enjoying each other's company.

Avon Jesse's artistically arranged booth in the north side of the building was the center of much attraction. The color scheme was white and lavender, festoons of crepe paper prettily arranged formed a very attractive decoration. Huge stalks of corn were used as a background, also along the ceiling, and neatly arranged on the shelves were many varieties of vegetables, canned goods and fruits, while grains and grasses were used effectively. He was awarded second prize.

George DeBok, the faithful one, was among the exhibitors in this line this year, and succeeded in again winning the handsome trophy cup offered by the Northwestern Pacific Railroad company, this being for the best general display of farm products. This is the second year that Mr. DeBok has won this cup. His booth was one of the centers of attraction in the pavilion. The ceiling was formed of Soudan grass, while at the rear were various varieties of grains and grasses, arranged in artistic design. All kinds of canned fruits and vegetables, the handiwork of Mr. DeBok, were arranged on the shelves, while the low shelves were filled with fresh vegetables and fruits.

E. N. Haines made his first exhibit from his farm by entering in the best exhibit of farm and household products, and was awarded the third prize. Vegetables, fruits and canned goods formed the entries in this booth.

The display of fruits and vegetables in the general display of Clackamas county in charge of Ralph McGetchie and W. C. Niles, of Gladstone, was a great credit to any fair. Although they had but a few days to collect these articles, they did exceptionally well. They were assisted by George Lazelle, who had charge of the pavilion.

Estacada had an exhibit that was worth seeing, and although it was some distance to bring this exhibit to Canby, everything exhibited had a good appearance. Many of the prize winning articles at this year's fair were in this collection. The booth was arranged and in charge of P. F. Standish, of Estacada.

Warner Grange was awarded the

SURE IT HAS

Death Penalty for Murder Has Been Abolished in Oregon

Recently a convict decided that life in the "out gang" at the penitentiary was not suitable to his temperament and he dodged out of his place among a group clearing brush and made a getaway. Subsequently he was pursued, shot a marshal, and later shot and killed the warden of the penitentiary. Then for a brief period he dropped out of sight.

This man murdered another, but some people might have supposed that because this happened in Oregon nothing worse than life imprisonment would follow as punishment. Not so the knowing ones. "The convict will be shot by the man who captures him," said they, "and he will be shot in self defense."

In course of time the convict, half starved, was discovered lying on his stomach in the mud under a partly completed house. Four men grasped him securely—so the newspaper reports stated, and started to drag him out. The convict rolled over in the course of this, and Patrolman Long of Portland, who recently shot a rioter near Linnton, pumped the convict full of lead from a shotgun at close range. The convict died two hours later.

In commenting on the occurrence, newspaper correspondents said that the convict had drawn a gun from under his stomach, and that the officer shot in self-defense. Of course he did—four men had hold of the convict at the time, and the gun the convict had wasn't loaded.

The death penalty has been abolished in Oregon. Sure it has.

SUIT THROWN OUT

Nathan Harvey's Complaint Against Newspaper Called Groundless

Suit of Nathan B. Harvey, of Ardenwald, for $75,000 against the Daily News, of Portland, was thrown out of court in Judge Davis's division of the circuit court last week. Judge Davis ruled that there was nothing of a libelous nature in the articles quoted in Harvey's complaint, and dismissed the action.

Harvey alleged that the News had intimated that he was implicated in the quadruple murder of the Hill family at Ardenwald some years ago, and that thereby his character and standing in the community were greatly damaged. Dismissal of the suit followed the filing of a demurrer by counsel for the News, in which it was declared that no adequate grounds of action had been set forth in the complaint.

Chance To Sell

The Gresham cannery is now asking for potatoes and apples in any quantity and offering to pay cash for potatoes of the best marketable kind. Mr. Sterling says there is a demand for the larger, smooth potatoes, weighing a pound or more, and used by the railroads and hotels as a baking potato. At present they bring about 25c above the market price. The price at present is ranging around 75c a hundred pounds which is considered a fair price for this time of year.—(Gresham Outlook.)

SAD NEWS COMES; FRITZ IS GOING!

GLOOM OF SORROW WILL FALL
OVER MILWAUKIE AND ELSEWHERE SOON

FRIEND MAKES ODD PROPHECY

Notable Man and Boon Companion of Many Folk Will Risk Future in Midst of New York Snares

(By Hazel Houseboat)

Quite a shock was given members of the younger and gayer set this week when the news leaked out that Mr. Fritz Boysen, proprietor of the Hotel Belle, at Milwaukie, will depart soon after the first of the year for New York. Mr. Boysen, who has long held enviable position in this locality as the leader of the merriest set in the county, will be sadly missed by scores and hundreds of his friends. In fact the gloomy shadow of his approaching departure has already been cast over our midst, and while attempt is still made here at gay parties, there is a subdued undertone of sadness always to be noted.

It must be admitted, however, in grace to strict accuracy, that Fritz has done all that he could to keep the news from being spread about. In fact your correspondent might not have heard of it at all, had not his fair and lovely partner, Belle, the life of most of our parties, confided the secret while mixing drinks in her boudoir, just back of the dining room. Our adorable social leader is delighted at the change which is coming to her life, and is looking forward with great eagerness to her debut in dear old New York.

"Chas," she said, in her inimitable patois, when telling your correspondent the news, "we are going to New York. Ach, shut up—(this last to a fox terrier, whose barking interrupted the conversation)—mein Gott, dogs give me such a pain. Chas, we are going to New York in January—Noo York has got sense, and it will never go dry. Ve will open a beer garden there, I think."

After Belle had told me I could not keep the news to myself, so perhaps I am as much responsible as anybody for spreading the report. And while it has in a way cast sorrow upon our numbers, it also has brought us some extra joy, for realizing that the end must soon come to Fritz's little parties, we have been going the limit at each gathering; so as to get the most that we can out of our social gaieties before they cease.

The chief cloud upon our horizon so far has been the persistent croaking of Marie, who formerly lived in New York—or Brooklyn, No, now that I come to think of it, Marie's home was in Bayonne, New Jersey; but she says she used to go to New York on Sunday nights. Marie says that Fritz will have a hard time of it back east—that his carefree ways and constant good cheer will not be appreciated; that the police will light on him as soon as he rolls off the ferry in his big red auto, and will lock him up for not having a driver's license.

And when Fritz tries to open up a quiet beer garden, Marie says he will have to pay tribute to the highrups, that he will not find New York officials as friendly as he has found those of Milwaukie and of Clackamas county—in short that he will be accused of running a rough joint, and that he will be pulled the first time he breaks the law. In fact Marie says that if Fritz is wise, he won't go to New York at all, but will be content to open up a place down near the coal bunkers on the "kills"—whatever they are.

Fritz, however, laughs at Marie, and says that he is really going to New York with Belle, and that he will "get by." His friends here hope so, for we'd hate to think of him in jail and not appreciated. And some of us wish he'd stick around, the way friend Wilbur is going to try and do, and find out what this dry law amounts to, anyway. But Fritz says he has had plenty, that he's been cleaning up about a thousand dollars a month here, and that he doesn't see why he should take a chance and spend any of that on lawyer's fees and fines. So he is going.

Without Fritz and Belle and their lovely place Milwaukie will seem a dull town indeed, and will lose much of its charm for those of us who really belong to the gay set. But in their new adventure we wish our delightful host and hostess at so many parties good luck; and all of us hope Marie's prophecies will not come true. We'd hate to think that after getting by sheriffs and things out here our Fritz couldn't get by an average, low-brow, New York bull.

Rev. W. C. Lang, of Iowa, a delegate to the general conference at Los Angeles, of the Evangelical church, visited his sister, Mrs. Weiversiek and family last week, and occupied the pulpit Sunday morning at the Evangelical church.
