The forces of organized labor in Oregon see nothing in charity. Therefore those forces are getting around to the idea of justice. Everywhere and every time when women and children go hungry and men go idle, there is injustice.

Charity merely delays the establishment of justice. The charity of Jesus was love; and real love includes justice. "Love one another," does not mean tossing a crust or a ladle of soup in a man's face, and robbing him of his heritage.

So the labor people are considering their land and loan measure. Land in city and country for those who want homes, and loans from the state to build and develop those homes. In several of the Australian states this is done. Millions are borrowed at a low rate by the state and loaned to men who will build and improve lands of the state. There is nothing wild or unreasonable about the proposition. The land and loan measure for the people of Oregon contemplates the securing of funds to loan home builders without borrowing. The people of Oregon are paying many millions of dollars to a few site owners in the large cities for permission to do business and live in Oregon.

Single blocks of sites for big stores and office buildings in Portland pay as much as $60,000 a year to the holders, and all the holders do is to get out of the way and let somebody else build. If that site value, created annually—daily, in fact—by the people to maintain local and state government activities and to loan sufficient to thousands of home builders to enable them to get a start.

Farmers taxed too much now? Of course. The farmer has no site value to speak of. All the site values owned by working farmers in some counties do not amount to as much as a single block in Portland.

Many working people of Portland want to relieve the land user of taxation and tax the land holder. Their measure will soon be out for initiative signatures. It has teeth in it for the site speculator, the forestaller, the cent-per-center, the timber, water power and several other trusts. It has homes, and peace, and prosperity and plenty in it for the people of Oregon. Therefore it is called the Peoples' Land and Loan Measure.

It will be lied about. It will be cried about. But it means Oregon for the workers and producers of Oregon; prosperity for Oregon, and justice for Oregon. Oregon for Oregon men, women and children—not for speculators and trusts.

The people of Oregon who work for what they get create all they get—and all they don't get. The small farmer of Oregon is not well organized, and therefore he is well skinned.

The unorganized worker has no body to speak for him but the organized worker.

It is about time for free soup houses and beds to appear again in Portland.

Many a mother in the United States thanks God that Wilson is on the job. No war of aggrandisement with him. No war for petty honor with him. No fields covered with mangled corpses of boys not out of their teens with him. And mothers are thanking God for Wilson every night, every hour, every minute. And the powder trust, and the munitions manufacturers, and

Thoughts on the Road Meeting

Editor Courier: If you will permit me, I will give you a few thoughts in regard to our road meeting, which was held in the courthouse the 25th of this month.

To begin with, I will say that anybody who failed to get there missed a good thing. It was a mixture of business, fun and enthusiasm, and the entertainment was so good that it held me there so long that it was dark when I got home. The sentiment of the meeting seemed to be decidedly opposed to enlarging the road districts.

The proposition offered was to reduce the sixty districts to nineteen, because of the belief that a good deal of the work that was now under headway would have to be neglected in trying to attend to such large districts, and that it would be impossible to vote a special tax under such conditions.

Some people thought that with such large districts there would be a good deal of contract work done, and that the contractors would hire all the cheap labor they could get hold of, the taxpayers having to pay the bills, and the dagoes doing most of the work.

Now this set me to thinking, but it surely was pretty hard to do straight thinking there at the meeting, for there was such a diversity of opinion and argument. One apparently level-headed man said that he had changed his mind three times since he had come there, and for my part I concluded to wait until I got home before I tried to do any straight thinking.

The prevailing opinion, when left, seemed to be to leave the road districts just as they are, and then try and select a good, level-headed man, who understood his business well and would work for the best interests of the county, and have him act as the roadmaster over the whole county. He would advise with and direct the work of all the supervisors, so as to make the road work uniform over the county. It seemed to be the desire to select this man from Clackamas county, if possible, and not import him. If we could get the right kind of a man this would be my preference of any of the propositions made.

To avoid this dago and cheap labor work being run in on us, and also to avoid having the taxpayers crowded out of the roadwork by non-taxpayers, both in this county and from other counties, I would suggest that the court make a ruling with all the supervisors of the county that any taxpayer in the county, whose assessment is less than $2,000 shall only be given enough work on the road to earn the amount of road tax that is against him in the county on his assessment for that year until he signs an agreement with the supervisor he is working under to donate 25 percent of his wages on the road to the county road fund. This to be done until the whole amount he has paid into the county road fund for that year amounts to the road tax on an assessment of $2,000. Also have every non-taxpayer, who wants to work on the road, sign an agreement with the supervisor, under whom he works, before he begins work, that he will donate 25 percent of his wages to the county road fund until his donation amounts to the road tax on an assessment of $2,000 for that year.

These non-taxpayers and small taxpayers like good roads just as well as any of us, and use them just about as much as any of us. They have just as great a wealth of muscle and strength as we have, and why should they not help some about building the roads and keeping them in repair? This system would take some of the burden off of the taxpayers and would encourage them to try and build better roads.

Yours for good roads and justice,
GEORGE HICINBOTHAM.

KNOWLEDGE IS CHEAP

Student Expenses at Agricultural College Held at Minimum

Student expenses at the Oregon Agricultural College average $217.78 for each of the four years. College expenses, including registration, laboratory fees, military and gymnasium suits, and graduation and thesis fees, average $22.40 for each of the four years. Books, instruments, stationery and other supplies cost on an average $29.33 cents for each year. Personal expenses, room, board and laundry, are $165.60 yearly. The personal expense of men students is $185 and those of women students, having advantage of the college halls, is but $100 each.

LITTLE CHANGE EXPECTED

Road Situation Occupies Much Time Before County Court

After an all-day session on Saturday of last week, when the county court listened to many arguments for and against changing the highway policy of the county, it appears at the time of the Courier's going to press that things will remain practically as they have been. While Judge Anderson is in favor of reducing the number of road districts to 19, with each one centering at some important traffic point, the other commissioners and the majority of the people who addressed the court Saturday do not seem to think that this business-like revision of road affairs is the thing to adopt at this time.

Many plans were suggested to the county court, including the appointment of a road master. Harvey E. Cross, of Gladstone thought that Charles Counsell, of Milwaukie, should be put in charge of the county's highway work, though he opposed a reduction in the number of road districts. Following Saturday's meeting the county court took the matter of changing this district boundaries under advisement, and were still discussing the thing among themselves when this was written. It is said that the general opposition to any radical alteration of highway policies will confine the county court to making only minor changes, and that next years road construction will be done much as such work has been done in the past.

FREE SPACE OFFERED

Portland Land Show Directors anxious to Get Plenty of Displays

In announcing the second annual Manufacturers' & Land Products Show at Portland this year the management has decided to give free exhibit space to all counties or communities. The Show opens October 25th and closes November 13th, and comes at a season of the year when all the county fairs and the State Fair at Salem are over.

More than 50,000 square feet of exhibit space has been provided for the display to be made showing the products of the factory, field and forest. To provide room for the land products exhibits, a temporary building will be erected adjoining the Armory.

The exhibition will show the agricultural and horticultural greatness of the Northwest. There is to be a grand prize for the best county display and special awards for potato and apple exhibits. Another prize will be given by the transportation lines and it is expected the exhibition will attract many visitors to Portland.

Miss Beatrice Kirkup, of Portland, has been elected supervisor of music in the county seat schools. She was formerly supervisor of music in the schools at Forest Grove, and in Oregon City will replace Mrs. Coovert.

INDIAN TRIBES OF NEW YORK FALL OFF

More Than 609 Fewer Than Ten Years Ago.

Albany, N. Y.—There are 609 fewer Indians on the reservations of New York state than ten years ago. But three tribes, the Onondagas, Tonawandas and Tuscaroras, show any gain in numbers, according to the official census figures made public by Secretary of State Francis M. Buro. The total number of Indians now living on the eight reservations is 4,451 as compared with 5,060 in 1905. According to the federal enumeration of 1910, the population of the Indian reservations was 5,729, but the figures included whites and other persons as well as the Redskins.

Out of the 4,451 now on the reservations 762 confess to being pagans, and 748 speak little or no English.

In the eight reservations there are 87,676 acres, of which the Indians are this summer cultivating 39,556, or an average of 448 acres for each man, woman and child. The census figures reveal that the St. Regis, Onondagas and the Tuscaroras are the largest tillers of the soil; the Allegany and the Cattaraugus Indians the least.

At the Onondaga reservation 4,266 acres out of 7,300 are under cultivation; St. Regis, 10,638 out of 14,000; Cattaraugus, 4,447 out of 21,080; Allegany, 3,858 out of 30,469; Shinnecock, 71 out of 400 acres; Tonawandas, 2,527 out of 7,548; Tuscaroras, 4,749 out of 6,249.

Pagans are shown as follows: Onondagas, 113; Cattaraugus, 300; Allegany, 287; Shinnecock, 5; St. Regis, 0; Tonawandas, 57; Tuscaroras, 0. The 748 found speaking little or no English are divided in the following manner: Onondagas, 34; St. Regis, 232; Cattaraugus, 86; Allegany, 101; Shinnecock, 0; Tonawandas, 239; Tuscaroras, 56.

BEARS FRUIT BY COMPASS.

When North and South Branches Fall East and West Are Laden.

Federalburg, Kan.—Noah Jones, a farmer living between Federalburg and Wheatley's camp ground, has on his farm an apple tree which is very much of a curiosity. The tree contains four branches which point to the north, south, east and west.

Last year the north and south branches were laden with fruit, while the east and west branches did not bear a single apple. This year the conditions are vice versa, the east and west branches being laden with apples, while the north and south branches are bare.

Church Plans Social

"Peace and Plenty" social will be given at the Congregational church, Oregon City, on Friday evening, and an interesting program is promised all who attend. Sunday there will be communion services in the church at the eleven o'clock service in the morning, and at half past seven in the evening the pastor, the Rev. George Nelson Edwards, will speak on "What the Bible teaches about the War."

NEW TAX METHOD

State Commission Makes Ruling on Matters Effecting Road Work

According to the state tax commission, two meetings of taxpayers in any road district must be held henceforth before special road taxes may be levied. At the first meeting, which is to be called in the manner designated by Section 6384, Lord's Oregon Laws, or Section 632 as amended in Chapter 316 Laws of 1913, action should be taken for the preparation of the budget or estimate of expenses, and the meeting can designate the road supervisor or some other qualified person to attend to this work. Provisions should be made for publication of the budget as required by law.

The second meeting should be called in the same manner as the first, to be held at the time and place mentioned in connection with the budget as published, says the commission. At the second meeting, and not before, the budget or estimates are to be finally passed upon and the tax levy is to be made.

Chapter 159, Laws of 1915, has no bearing on the proceedings, except as it would be necessary to publish or post notices for 30 days in the event of a purpose to levy a tax exceeding by more than six per cent the larger amount levied in either of the last preceding years when levies were made, says the commission.

ANSWERING A WRITER

Courier Thanks Correspondent for Suggestion Made in Letter

Last week that sweet old man who delights to masquerade under the signature of "T. LORD C." suggested that the Courier get rid of its "Wolf Howlers," and substitute for them "Lay Sermons."

The Courier desires to thank the cantankerous young upstart, Mr. T. Lord C., for his suggestion, but begs to say that it is unavailable at this time.

If the kind-hearted lady who signs herself "T. Lord C." wants to know why the Courier cannot use the offered suggestion the Courier will say it doesn't think any more sermons are needed in this community; and even if it did think sermons were needed, it would hesitate before trying to outshine the gentry who now so ably fill our local sermon mills.

We trust this will satisfy "T. Lord C." for the time being.

OLD RESIDENT DIES

Claus Krohn, Well-Known Lodgeman, Passes Away at Highland

A resident of Clackamas county for over a quarter of a century, Claus Krohn died Sunday night at the residence of Dan Fellows, at Highland. Mr. Krohn was 62 years of age, and came to the Oregon country when a young man from his birthplace in Germany. For many years he was engaged in farming and developing various holdings in Clackamas county, and about ten years ago moved to Oregon City.

He is survived by three daughters and two sons, besides Mrs. Wiebke Krohn, his divorced wife, all of Portland. They were notified of his death Monday. The funeral will probably be held Wednesday morning under the auspices of the Redmen lodge.
