CHAPTER XIV.

That Sick Man From San Antonio.

It was part of the strategy practiced by the Cuban leaders to divide their forces into separate columns for the purpose of raiding the smaller Spanish garrisons and harassing the troops sent to their relief, reassembling these bands only when and where some telling blow was to be struck.

When O'Reilly and Branch enlisted in the Army of the Orient they were assigned to the command of Col. Miguel Lopez, and it was under his leadership that they made their first acquaintance with the peculiar methods of Cuban warfare.

There had been, at first, some doubt of Branch's fitness to take the field at all—he had suffered a severe hemorrhage shortly after his arrival at Cuba—and it was only after a hysterical demonstration on his part that he had been accepted as a soldier. He simply would not be left behind. At first the Cubans regarded him with mingled contempt and pity, for certainly no less promising volunteer had ever taken service with them. But upon the occasion of the very first fight all ill-will disappeared as if by magic, for, although Branch deliberately disobeyed orders, he nevertheless displayed such amazing audacity in the face of the enemy, such a theatrical contempt for bullets, as to stupefy every one. Moreover, he lived up to his reputation; he continued to be insanely daring, varying his exploits to correspond with his moods, with the result that he attained a popularity which was unique, nay, sensational.

O'Reilly alone understood the reason for the fellow's morbid irritability, his suicidal recklessness; but when he privately remonstrated he was gruffly told to mind his own business. Branch flatly refused to modify his conduct; he seemed really bent upon cheating the disease that made his life a misery.

But, as usual, fate was perverse; she refused to humor the sick man's hope. When, after blindly inviting death, Leslie had emerged from several engagements unscathed, his surprise—and perhaps a natural relief at finding himself whole—became tinged with a certain apprehension lest he survive those deliberately courted dangers only to succumb to the ills and privations of camp life. The fellow's tongue grew ever sharper; his society became intolerable, his gloom oppressive and irresistibly contagious. When, after several weeks of campaigning, the column went into camp for a short rest, O'Reilly decided that he would try to throw off the burden of Leslie's overwhelming dejection, and, if possible, shift a portion of it upon the shoulders of Captain Judson.

On the day after their arrival O'Reilly and the big artilleryman took advantage of a pleasant stream to bathe and wash their clothes; then, while they lay in their hammocks, enjoying the luxury of a tattered old-cloth shelter and waiting for the sun to dry their garments, O'Reilly spoke what was in his mind.

"I'm getting about fed up on Leslie," he declared. "He's the world's champion crepe-hanger, and he's painted the whole world such a deep, despondent blue that I'm completely dismal. You've got to take him off my hands."

O'Reilly's youthful assistant, who at the moment was painstakingly manufacturing a huge, black cigar for himself out of some purloined tobacco, pricked up his ears at the mention of Branch's name and now edged closer, exclaiming:

"Caramba! There's a hero for you. Meester Branch is the bravest man I ever seen. Our people call him 'El Demonio'!"

O'Reilly jerked his head toward the Cuban. "You see? He's made the hit of his life, and yet he resents it. My nerves are frayed out. I've argued myself hoarse, but he misconstrues everything I say. I wish you'd convince him that he has a chance to get well; it might alter his disposition. If something doesn't alter it I'll be court-martialed for shooting a man in his sleep—and I'll hit him right in the middle, no matter how slim he is." O'Reilly compressed his lips firmly.

The assistant, who had finished rolling his cigar, now lighted it and repeated: "Yes, sir, Meester Branch is the bravest man I ever seen. You remember that first battle, eh? Those Spaniards seen him comin' and threw down their guns and beat it. I laugh to think myself that day."

"Jacket" was at once the youngest and the most profane member of Colonel Lopez's entire command. The most shocking oaths fell from his beardless lips whenever he opened them to speak English, and O'Reilly's efforts to break the boy of the habit proved quite unavailing.

This Camagueyan boy was a character. He was perhaps sixteen, and small for his age—a mere child, in fact. Nevertheless, he was a seasoned veteran, and his American campmates had grown exceedingly fond of him. He was a pretty, graceful youngster; his eyes were large and soft and dark; his face was as sensitive and mobile as that of a girl; and yet, despite his youth, he had won a reputation for daring and ferocity quite as notable in its way as was the renown of Leslie Branch.

In order to expand his knowledge of English—of which, by the way, he was laudably proud—Jacket had volunteered to serve as O'Reilly's striker, and the result had been a fast friendship. It was O'Reilly who had given the boy his nickname—a name prompted by a marked eccentricity, for although Jacket possessed the two garments which constituted the ordinary insurgente uniform, he made a practice of wearing only one. On chilly nights, or on formal occasions, he wore both waistcoat and trousers, but at other times he dispensed entirely with the latter, and his legs were naked. They were naked now, as, with the modesty of complete unconsciousness, he squatted in the shade, puffing thoughtfully at his giant cheroot.

Once Jacket's mind was fastened upon any subject, it remained there, and after a time he continued:

"Did I tell you about that battle of Pino Bravo? Eh?" He turned his big brown eyes upward to O'Reilly. "Cris-to! I skill more'n a dozen men that day!"

"It was a hot scrimmage," Judson attested. "Some of Lopez's niggers, those tall, lean, hungry fellows from Santiago, managed to hack their way through a wire fence and get behind a detachment of the enemy who had made a stand under a mill. They got charged, and for a wonder they got close enough to use their machetes. It was bloody work—the kind you read about—no quarter. Somehow Jacket managed to be right in the middle of the butchery. He's a bravo kid, all right. Muy malo!"

At that moment Branch approached, his long face set in lines of discontent, even deeper than usual. He had been wandering about the camp in one of his restless fits, and now he began:

"Say, what do you think I've been doing? I've been looking up some grub for Miss Evans, and I can't find any."

"Can't find any?"

"Nothing fit for her to eat. You don't expect her to live on this infernal, eternal beef stew."

"Didn't Major Ramos bring anything along?" O'Reilly asked.

"He says there's a famine at Cubitas."

"We'd better look into this," Judson exclaimed, and, finding that his clothes were dry, he hurriedly began to dress himself.

Together, the three men made an investigation of the camp's resources, only to discover that Branch was right. There was, indeed, but little food of any kind, and that little was of the coarsest. Ordinarily, such a condition of affairs would have occasioned them no surprise, for the men were becoming accustomed to a more or less chronic scarcity of provisions; but the presence of Norine Evans put quite a different complexion upon the matter. They were still discussing the situation when Miss Evans, having finished her afternoon nap, threw open the flaps of her tent and stepped out.

When she had listened to the account apologetically submitted by the three friends, she drew her brows together, saying, plaintively: "Oh dear! We've been going short for a week, and Major Ramos told me we'd fare better when we got here. I had my mouth all set for a banquet. Couldn't you even find the poor dog a bone?"

"I'm afraid the cupboard is bare," O'Reilly acknowledged.

"Do you know what I want for dinner?" Norine inquired. "Lamb chops with green peas, some nice white bread, a salad, and coffee."

The three men looked at her anxiously. Judson stirred uneasily.

"That's what I want. I don't expect to get it."

With a sigh of relief the captain exclaimed, "I thought you were giving your order."

"Goodness, no!" With a laugh the girl seated herself upon her camp chair, inviting her callers to dispose themselves on the ground about her.

"If you can stand the food, I dare say I can. Now then, tell me what you've been doing since you left Cubitas. I've been frightened to death that some of you would be hurt. That's one reason why I've been working night and day helping to get the hospitals in shape. I can't bear to think of our boys being wounded. Everything is so different to what I thought it would be, and I'm so weak and ineffective. The medical supplies I brought are nearly all gone, and I've learned what hard work it is fitting up hospitals when there's nothing to fit them up with." She sighed. "I imagined I was going to work wonders—I thought I was going to be a Florence Nightingale, and the men were going to idolize me."

"No. That is—not in exactly the way I expected."

"They all want to marry her," O'Reilly explained.

"Insolent bunch!" growled the captain. Then he swallowed hard and said, "But for that matter, so do I."

"How silly you boys can be!" Norine laughed. "I dare say the others are joking too, but—"

"Joking?" O'Reilly grinned. "Not at all. I'm the only single man in camp who isn't in love with you. When you arrived this morning there was a general stampede for the river. I'll bet the fish in this stream will taste of soap for years to come."

As if to point O'Reilly's words at the moment appeared Colonel Lopez, shaven head and clad in a recently laundered uniform which was still damp. The three Americans rose to salute him, but discipline was lax and he waved them back to their seats.

"We've been talking about food," Leslie Branch advised his commanding officer. "Miss Evans isn't a burning patriot like the rest of us, and so of course she can't share our ravenous appetite for beef cooked and eaten on the hoof."

"So?" Lopez's handsome face clouded. "You are hungry, then?"

Norine confessed that she was. "I'm starving!" said she. "I haven't had a decent meal for a week."

"God be praised! I know where there is a goat, not two leagues away!" said the colonel.

"But I don't want a goat," Norine complained. "I want—well, pickles, and jam, and sardines, and—candy, and—powder! Real boarding-house luxuries. I'd just like to rob a general store."

Lopez furrowed his brows and lost himself in thought. Later, while the others were talking, he drew Ramos aside and for a while they kept their heads together; then they invited Judson to join their council.

When O'Reilly joined Judson for supper the latter met him with a broad grin on his face. "Well," said he, "you can get ready to saddle up when the moon rises."

"What do you mean?"

"The colonel took Miss Evans at her word. We're going to raid San Antonio de los Banos—two hundred of us—to get her some pickles, and jam, and candy, and tooth-powder."

Certain histories of the Cuban War for Independence speak of "The Battle of San Antonio de los Banos." It is quite a stirring story to read and it has but one fault, a fault, by the way, not uncommon in histories—it is mainly untrue.

In the first place, the engagement was in no sense a battle, but merely a raid. The number of troops engaged was, perhaps, one-fifth of the generous total ascribed by the historians, and as a military maneuver it served no purpose whatsoever. Nevertheless, since the affair had a direct bearing upon the fortunes of several people connected with this story, it is, perhaps, worth relating.

Lopez and his troop approached the town in the early morning. As they deployed for the attack the colonel issued private instructions to certain members of his command.

"O'Reilly, you and Senior Branch will enter one grocery store after another. You will purchase that jam, those sardines, and whatever else you think Miss Evans would like. Captain Judson, you and Major Ramos will go to the apothecary shop—I understand there is a very good one—and look for tooth-powder and candy and the like. I shall see that the streets are cleared, then I shall endeavor to discover some pickles; but as God is my judge, I doubt if there is such a thing this side of Habana."

Leslie Branch, whose temper had not improved with the long night ride, inquired, caustically: "Do you expect us to buy the groceries? Well, I'm broke, and so is O'Reilly. If you don't give us some change, colonel, we'll have to open a charge account in your name."

"Caramba!" muttered Lopez. "I intended to borrow from you gentlemen. Well, never mind—we'll commandeer what we wish in the name of the republic."

Barber, who for more than seven years has been chief deputy in the state department of insurance, is the recipient of the appointment by Governor Olcott to succeed Harvey Wells as state insurance commissioner. The boy found the poison in the basement of the home, where it had lain forgotten for 15 years. Then he walked to the head of the stairs on the third floor, and told his father, Walter F. Burrell, president of the Burrell Investment company and prominent in financial circles, what he had done.

ABERDEEN, Wash., July 10.—R. W. Venable, of Seattle, manager of a Seattle correspondence school, died early this morning from injuries received yesterday afternoon near Montezuma, when an automobile in which he was riding with E. E. Wolfe, of this city, was struck by a Northern Pacific passenger train. Wolfe escaped slightly injured.

CLACKAMAS BOYS HOME

NEW YORK, July 10.—Paul Sawtell, of Molalla, and Donald A. Snyder, of Sherwood, arrived today on the U. S. S. Marcia.

Hisses and Hopes

We have reported in our news columns for the edification of the people of the United States that the Irish, to the number of 10,000, gathered together in New York to attend an "Irish Republic" meeting, hissed President Wilson, General Haig and the British nation.

We have no quarrel with the Irish for hissing the idol of the British army, nor do we presume to criticize them for acting like a lot of geese when they think of England. Let 'em go to it! They may have reasons of their own.

But these thousands and other thousands of Irish people came to America to better their own condition, financially and physically, and they have no license to hiss the man who happens to be the biggest man in America—the President of the United States.

The Enterprise is a Republican newspaper, and has from time to time taken exceptions to certain policies and utterances of the President. That is the right of every newspaper, and of every citizen. This is a country of free speech and free press, within the bounds of law and of decency. But we don't fancy a lot of people who have a grudge at England have any right to hiss our President, just because they do not agree with him as to his own official conduct.

Pat is apt to be a hot-blooded man. The sod of Ould Ireland is very dear to him, and we have a certain sympathy for his feelings. Let him expostulate to the end of time, if he likes, but when he hisses the chief executive of this nation, he is stepping on the toes of millions of patriotic Americans, who are Americans first, last and all the time, and Republicans or Democrats, as the case may be, in matters of principle and judgment.

STATE OWNED BANK PROPOSED TO MAKE FARM LOANS AT COST

BISMARCK, N. D., July 11.—The first of the state-owned enterprises to be established in North Dakota under the laws passed by the former legislature is the Bank of North Dakota. It is modeled after the federal reserve bank and the federal farm loan bank combined. To give rural credits at cost is its first purpose and, second, to finance the state-owned terminal elevators and mills.

Farm loans are made under an amortization plan by which the borrower repays at the rate of 7 per cent a year on the original principal and extinguishes the entire debt in 30 years. For capital stock the state central bank has $2,000,000 in state bonds. Under the law all public funds must be deposited with the Bank of North Dakota, which redeposits them with its depository banks. Many state bankers already favor the innovation as giving them a central organization, which enables them better to compete with the national banking systems.

At the head of the Bank of North Dakota is F. W. Catbro, one of the most conservative bankers of the state. He was first president of the State Bankers' association and headed the National bank of Bismarck, N. D., for 20 years. He is confident of the success of the state bank and that it will help, rather than hamper, the bankers of the state. He believes the state bank will bring money to the state and keep the state's money at home.

The public debt decreased $436,645, 113 in June and at the end of the month totaled $25,484,106.10, according to a statement by the treasury.

Death Takes Son Of Movie Actor

LOS ANGELES, July 11.—While thousands laughed at Charlie Chaplin's antics on the movie screen today, the king of mirth was bitterly mourning the death of his first born son—the babe born to Chaplin and his wife, Mildred Harris Chaplin.

Death came to the child 72 hours after birth. Chaplin had been told by physicians the child could not live and for the last 48 hours of the babe's life the famous comedian never left the nursery.

Fall From Swing is Fatal to Small Girl

PORTLAND, July 14.—Genevieve Hyatt, gifted little 9-year-old daughter of R. E. Hyatt, of the Hyatt Talking Machine company, died Sunday morning at Good Samaritan hospital as the result of injuries received the day before at Seaside from a fall from a swing.

Genevieve and her playmates were having a gay time in a swing secured to a tall tree in front of the cottage her family was occupying, when she fell from the seat and was wedged tightly in the roots of an old stump.

Local physicians thought her severe injury was a broken arm and with the soothing aid of anesthetics she was brought to Portland Saturday night. Later examinations showed her suffering from a concussion of the brain and she died early yesterday morning.

Elevator Accident Kills Meter Reader

PORTLAND, July 14.—W. C. Schutte, aged 34, meter reader for the Portland Railway, Light & Power company, was killed at 9 o'clock this morning in an elevator accident in the Almsworth building, Third and Oak streets. Schutte had been in the basement reading the meters.

RELATIONS WITH GERMANY MUST BE EXPEDITED

WASHINGTON, July 10.—President Wilson, conferring with newspaper correspondents at the White house today, indicated that he was extremely gratified that the treaty of peace had been ratified so promptly by the German national assembly.

The president also indicated that he felt trade relations between Germany and the associated nations should be resumed at the earliest moment possible, for without trade Germany could not meet the reparations demanded of her.

It was made clear that the president felt troops should be maintained in Germany until the Germans had complied with all the military terms of the treaty. It was pointed out that there were several million veteran soldiers in Germany and munitions sufficient for them to operate.

The Germans have from one to four months in which to deliver all material, except that sufficient for the reduced German army provided for in the peace treaty, and the president believes American troops should stay on the Rhine until the material is delivered.

Discussing the peace negotiations at Paris, President Wilson let it be known that the league of nations covenant will be in every treaty negotiated at Versailles, including that with Bulgaria, with which country the United States never was at war.

In response to questions regarding the Rhine situation, the president pointed out that the treaty of London provided that Rhine was to go to Croatia, and that Italy did not lay claim to the city when that treaty was signed.

The president made it clear that demobilization of the American army would depend upon the speed with which the military conditions of the peace treaty were executed by Germany, and the treaty was ratified by the various governments.

PRACTICAL SPEED BOATS ARE PERFECTED

ALGONAC, Mich., July 15.—Those two wonder boats of the season—one a cruiser capable of better than 40 miles an hour and the other a runabout that can make 56—are making their first racing appearance at Put-in-Bay this week during the inter-lake regatta.

Both of these boats are owned by "Gar" Wood, driver of the famous Miss Detroit speedboat champions, who has accomplished his aim of bringing out practical boats of racing speed. The boats have lived up to expectations in every particular.

TIED A BALLOON TO HOG PEN

PORTLAND, July 15.—Hogs aviated again in the North Portland market during the day with a new high price record established at $22.25, or 25 cents above any previous price ever reached in the local yards.

The advance in the price here was made in face of the fact that Chicago was weaker and lower. In addition to this there was a very liberal run of swine in the North Portland yards, a total run of 1533 head being received for the opening trade of the week.

This means higher pork chops, lard and bacon as well as hams.

NEW NUMBERING PLAN HAS GOOD FEATURES

PORTLAND, July 11.—Report on a new street numbering system for Portland, including 100 numbers to the block, will be made to the council by City Engineer Laugaard Wednesday. The engineer will recommend that the city be divided into five numbering districts with Burnside street and the river as meridians.

HURLEY LEAVES BOARD

WASHINGTON, July 10.—President Wilson today accepted the resignation of Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the shipping board, effective August 1. It is understood that Mr. Hurley will be succeeded by John Barton Payne, general counsel of the railroad administration.

Bad Mother - In-Law Her Aim Was Good Kills Young Hubby

BLUEFIELD, W. Va., July 11.—Roy Willard, 20, bridegroom of half an hour, is dead today and his mother-in-law, Mrs. W. J. Taylor, is being held by the police charged with the shooting. Mrs. Taylor had objected to her daughter marrying Willard and refused to witness the ceremony, which was performed at the home of a neighbor. A few minutes after the marriage Mrs. Taylor appeared and fired six shots at Willard, the young bridegroom being killed instantly.

LEAGUE IS DESIGNATED GUARANTEE OF PEACE

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The senate today was given complete power to finish the task of ending the war with Germany. President Wilson, fresh from the peace conference at Paris, laid before the senate—authorized under the constitution to ratify all treaties—the complete text of the document signed by the German delegates and the representatives of the allied and associated powers at Versailles.

The president raised the issue of the League of Nations in clear and unmistakable terms. He told the senate that the peoples of the world "bled white" wanted a permanent peace. He warned that if the League of Nations was not created and its future assured, "there must be another and a final war and the world must be swept clean of every power that could renew the terror."

The president reviewed the changed attitude of the European statesmen toward the league and then demanded:

"They saw it as the hope of the world and that hope they did not dare to disappoint. Shall we or any other free people hesitate to accept this great duty? Dare we reject it and break the heart of the world?"

The president was listened to earnestly. When he declared that his services and all the information he possessed dealing with the treaty was at the disposal of the foreign relations committee and of the senate the advocates of ratification nodded their approval.

The president's tribute to the part that America's "moral force" played in the struggle was greeted with cheering and applause. It was a continuation of the applause which had greeted him as he took his place in front of the vice president's chair.

The president read his address from small typewritten cards and his voice was firm and carried to the remote portions of the chamber.

The president's announcement that he did not intend to confuse the issue by presenting the special pact between Great Britain, France and the United States at this time was received with approval by the majority of the senators. It had been recognized that there would be material opposition to this proposed treaty, even from senators who favored ratification of the German treaty.

WOMAN'S BODY IS FOUND NEAR OLYMPIA, WASH.

OLYMPIA, Wash., July 10.—Information concerning a woman missing from Portland or other Oregon point is sought by officers as the last probable clue to the mystery of a murder committed a month or more ago, within a mile and a half of Plum station, seven miles south of this city. The body of a woman, buried face down and with no clothing save an undergarment, was found there late last night in a shallow grave by T. H. Pitner not far from the Pacific highway.

SHIPYARD WORKERS TO DEMAND MORE MONEY

SAN FRANCISCO, July 15.—A new scale and working agreement for shipyard workers and iron tradesmen of the Pacific coast will be drafted at a series of conferences that began today in San Francisco and will last throughout the week.

The conference report, which is to be formulated by representatives of Pacific coast unions meeting with the heads of metal trades departments of the American Federation of Labor, is designed to replace the Macy awards, and will be submitted to the employers for ratification when the present wage agreements expire.

The iron tradesmen's tentative demand is for a basic wage of $1 an hour for skilled crafts. They ask for a 44-hour week. The present basic scale is 80 cents an hour.

BROTHER'S PIPE WILL SOON FIT SISTER

LONDON.—Two explanations of the shortage of tobacco and cigarettes are given by a representative of the Imperial Tobacco company:

A preference for cigarettes by soldiers who smoked a pipe before the war.

The increased and ever-increasing number of women who have developed the habit of cigarette smoking.

With regard to the second point, the representative said that most people failed to appreciate the number of cigarettes consumed by women.

"Recently," he added, "two girls about to start on a fortnight's holiday called on one of our customers for 2000 cigarettes, which they 'hoped' would see them through."

POLK SUCCEEDS LANSING

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Acting Secretary of State Polk will sail for France July 21 to take Secretary of State Lansing's place at the Paris peace conference. Lansing sailed from Brest today.

CHEHALIS RESIDENTS HOSTS TO NATIONAL EDITORIAL DELEGATES

CHEHALIS, Wash., July 10.—Chehalis residents are giving attention to the big National Editorial association meeting in the Northwest in August and the fact that this big body will stop in Chehalis two hours August 8. The party is due to arrive from the north, Portland bound, about 12 o'clock, Friday, August 8. The visitors will be here two hours. Local editors and publicity and conventions bureau of the Chehalis Citizens' club are preparing tentative plans for receiving and entertaining the delegation.

There will be 250 to 300 delegates in the party who are traveling in their own special trains. There will be delegates from all parts of the United States. This year they enjoy a pilgrimage to the Northwest when the season is at its best. They will make only three stops in Washington—at Chehalis, Tacoma and Seattle. The bringing of this party to the Northwest is due largely to Frank Goss, of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, and E. E. Brodie, of Oregon City, who attended the convention in Arkansas last year and succeeded in landing the 1919 session for the Northwest.

PHILIPPINE PRODUCT IS NEARLY DOUBLED IN VALUE OVER 1918

MANILA, July 11.—The value of the hemp, sugar, tobacco and coconut crops of the Philippines nearly double in 1918 the figure for the previous year, agriculture is credited with a large share in the increased prosperity which has come to the island, according to the annual report of Director Hernandez of the bureau of agriculture. The only blot on the record was the scarcity of foodstuffs, as the Philippines failed to produce the supplies of rice and other products necessary for home consumption.

IRISH HISS WILSON, ENGLAND, HAIG, BUT CHEER FOR DE VALERA

NEW YORK, July 11.—Fifteen thousand Irishmen and women in Madison Square Garden last night hissed President Wilson, England, Sir Douglas Haig and others and cheered the Irish republic and "President" De Valera. The demonstration was echoed by an overflow crowd of 10,000. The meeting was a greeting to De Valera, who sat on the platform.

Resolutions were passed demanding that the United States recognize the Irish republic.

MEXICAN GREEN EYES PROVE UNDOING FOR CARRANZA'S OFFICER

SAN FRANCISCO, July 11.—Green eyes proved the undoing of Carlos C. Garcia, former lieutenant colonel in Carranza's army, charged with absconding with $50,000 in Mexican government funds.

The green eyes are Garcia's own, and this unusual shade of optics in the features of a Mexican caused detectives to recognize him as the fug
