Every Hour You are Forced to Spend in Your Kitchen Means One Less Recreation Hour

DO YOU, like the average man and woman, divide your day into eight hours for SLEEP, eight for RECREATION and eight for WORK?

Do you find, however, that this plan is often upset because you are forced to spend, not eight, but NINE or TEN hours at your work?

Are not most of these OVERTIME HOURS spent in the kitchen—and are they not really taken from your recreation hours?

Your problem is to CUT DOWN, not ADD to your work hours. That is the only way in which your PERSONAL WORLD—bounded usually by the limits of your HOUSEHOLD—may be really HAPPY and CONTENTED.

THINK!

If you find your day contains too many work hours and too few recreation hours, look into this question of electrical cooking and see how it enables you to rearrange your day to greater advantage.
