THE MIND OF GERMANY

Extracts of Lecture Delivered at Chautauqua at Gladstone by Dr. Frank Bohn

Dr. Frank Bohn, a professor of history and political economy at Columbia University, New York, delivered an interesting lecture at Chautauqua entitled "The Mind of Germany." His treatment of the theme made a strong impression upon his hearers.

Dr. Bohn is of German parentage. His father, who was a member of the convention of 1849 at Frankfurt-on-the-Main, came to America as a refugee, when the republicans were defeated and Bismarck triumphed in the formation of the monarchy.

Dr. Bohn has traveled in Germany and spent several months there as a correspondent for the New York Post. In his lecture Dr. Bohn said in part:

If you have planted one of those gardens which the president has instructed us all to plant and tend most carefully, you will no doubt meet with peculiar difficulties. Your neighbor's chickens are sure to get into that garden and play havoc among the turnips and the squash. That experience will be a test for your innermost soul. Will you hate those chickens? Will you hate the woman who owns those chickens? If you hate either, then you are unprepared to be a citizen of the world in this generation. If you have an understanding mind you cannot have a hating heart. The basis of world citizenship is an understanding on your part of the mind of our common humanity.

German Point of View

In studying the mind of Germany I proceeded from the point of view that the Germans are very much like other people; that they react to the same causes; that they are moved by the same impulses. I began by paying a visit to the most important person in Germany. Some of you will think that I went to see the Kaiser. I did not. I went to see Mrs. Schmidt, who kept a cheap rooming house in the working class district of Berlin. I found Mrs. Schmidt scrubbing the back stairs of her rooming house. She had a bucket of water in one hand, a scrubbing brush in the other and a large piece of brown soap lay before her on the stairs. "If you please," said I, "I should like to have a room in your house."

No Use for Gentlemen

"We don't entertain gentlemen here," replied Mrs. Schmidt. "Please don't think of me as a gentleman," said I, "I am a working man who will be much happier here among your working people than I would be living among those you term ladies and gentlemen."

"We haven't any kerosene," said Mrs. Schmidt. "Bring me a candle," said I. "You will never find me objecting to conditions as I find them." So presently I found myself comfortably located in Mrs. Schmidt's house, with a blazing fire of briquettes and Mrs. Schmidt sitting in the rocking chair telling me about the war. Mrs. Schmidt didn't talk about strategy and tactics, nor about diplomacy and fiscal policies. She talked much about her own boys, Max and Fritz.

"You know I brought them up myself," she said. "Mr. Schmidt died when Max was five, but I have always had plenty of roomers here in the house and my table in the basement has always been full, so, thank God, I was able to feed them. I even saved enough money to put them through the technical high school. They both graduated and were doing well. They were helping me and I was about to have them happily married when the war started, but I was very glad to give up the boys. The Kaiser needed them. The country must be brave during the war. When I visited Fritz, my favorite, at his camp in Ruhlaba, and said good-bye to the last time, I told him I wanted to hear that he had fought hard, and that I would rather not have him come back to me at all than return with a defeated army. But, of course, I spend many sleepless nights thinking about the boys."

"Did they ask you about the war, when they began it?" I inquired. "Oh no," she replied, "nobody cared what I thought."

"Well," said I, "the time is going to come when you and the Mrs. Schmidts of all lands look straight into the faces of the Kaisers and kings and demand that they first get your consent before they go to war. Did you ever wish to send the Kaiser's sons to war without his consent?"

Mrs. Schmidt's eyes opened wide and her color came and went. "You must not let anybody hear you talk that way," she said. "I would not dare think thus, much less speak thus."

How the Kaiser Rules

The mind of Mrs. Schmidt was a mind formed for the will of her ruler. She believed implicitly what she read in the newspapers. To her mind the Kaiser was the vice-regent of God on earth. His motives must not be questioned, nor his will opposed in the slightest detail. The one thing useful which Germany utterly lacks is individual opinion, individual responsibility and individual conscience.

In the hill country of the Thuringia I had the pleasure of living with country people, relatives of mine. While with them I perhaps came a little closer to the German mind and the German heart in time of war than any other American. As is the custom in Germany, even most distant relatives did me the honor of calling on me in the evening of the day I arrived. There also came one, who, while he claimed no relationship, said that he had known me long ago in Ohio, before I was old enough to know him. While in Ohio he had joined the Methodist church.

What's Wrong With England

"Of course," said I, "as you are a Methodist, you love England, the country of John Wesley; so you can not say as all Germany is saying, 'God punish England.'"

"You are mistaken," said he. "God is indeed punishing England, and I, a loyal Methodist and follower of John Wesley, am permitted to know why the punishment is being meted out. England has the glorious opportunity of converting the world to the right and true religion, Methodism, but England proved unfit for the task of the Lord's evangel. England is far too greedy, too jealous, too altogether wicked. I know what God is doing. He is using Germany as an instrument with which to punish England for her unworthiness. After God has used Germany as a means to beat England into the dust, he will make Germany Methodist, and Germany will teach Methodism to the world."

Religion and Patriotism

You can understand the mind of Germany only if you can conceive of patriotism having developed into a religion. German patriotism is not essentially different from American patriotism; there is only more of it. In Germany it has become a religion, absorbing every other religion. In every nation in the world patriotism is the only great cause for which millions will sacrifice and suffer.

An actress in Berlin, a girl of perhaps 22 years of age, told me that when the war was over she expected that her French lover would return and marry her. As she had expressed hatred for the French, I was surprised that she should be so devoted to an individual Frenchman.

"Oh," she said, "Francois is a splendid fellow. He represented a great French business house here before the war. We have selected our apartment and the pictures to hang upon the walls. I haven't had a word from him since the war began, but I know that if he lives he loves me still, and will be back to me the first time he gets a chance."

"Suppose," I said, "that he returns as a member of the French army marching right down the street there behind the tricolor?"

"In that case," she replied, "I would not let him come within 30 paces of me."

"What's that, you care more for your Kaiser than you do for Francois, whom you are going to marry?"

"Of course I do," she said, "I would die for the Kaiser any day. I would not die for Francois, although I shall marry him if he returns."

Finally in complete justification of my contention that German patriotism has become the only religion of Germany, let me relate my experience with the Y. M. C. A. secretary at Dresden.

At the Y. M. C. A. prayer services at Dresden, which I attended, the secretary advised in exhortation to us that we should live Christianity—that we should not merely perform lip service, but true heart service to Almighty God, yet I noticed that when he prayed, he prayed only for things German; for the German army and the German navy, for the German Kaiser, the German generals, and for German widows and German orphans. He prayed that the Y. M. C. A. members of Dresden might be returned to the fellowship of their Christian friends but he said nothing to God about the return of the Y. M. C. A. members of London to the fellowship of their friends. Later, when I saw him alone, I asked him what he and his Y. M. C. A. and the churches of Germany were doing to stop the war.

"We can do nothing," said he, "the war can only end with the victory of Germany. The Kaiser is right. We were attacked by malicious and jealous enemies and must defend ourselves. Then, anyway," he said, "the war is doing a great deal of good."

How War Does Good

"I should like to have explained to me," said I, "what good the war is accomplishing."

"Why," said he, "here's a letter from the front; I wish you would read it." I read the letter. It was from a young man who declared his joy in the fact that he had been converted to the Christianity at a Y. M. C. A. meeting in the army.

"That young man," continued the Y. M. C. A. secretary, "used to be often seen about the Y. M. C. A. here. He came to the gymnasium. He came to theatrical performances, but never once to a devotional meeting. Now you must admit, if the war had not come upon us, this young man never would have been converted. As he was shot dead the day after he wrote me this beautiful letter it is furthermore evident that it is due to the war that his soul is now saved and in heaven."

Hearts Are All Right

Not wishing to continue so futile an argument, I rose and left him. He wrung my hand warmly and said, "Good-bye, God bless you, come again." So said they all good-bye to me. The great difficulty with Germany, as with every other country in the world, is not a matter of heart. Their hearts are of pure gold. The trouble is with the mind of the nation. The mind of the masses in Germany, like the mind of the mass of people everywhere, does not reflect much upon the fundamental things of international relationships. It humbly accepts what it finds in the newspapers and permits those who sit in high places to lead it or mislead it at will.

Understanding the Mind of Germany

I wish now to explain the mind of Germany and to indicate the differences which mark it off from the mind of the other peoples of Europe. The subject of international politics and of national character is not at all difficult if you proceed to study it in the right way. The beginning of all knowledge of social progress lies in the study of geography. If we first study geography with reference to the location and the contents of the soil of a nation, and second with reference to the processes by which people produce the necessities of life, we shall have a key not only to social change but to racial character.

How People Differ

I recall that when I was a boy, living some 10 miles back from the shore of Lake Erie in Ohio, I noticed that there were marked differences between the people of the Lake shore and the people of our township. Similarly there were differences between ourselves and the people of "Hardscrabble," who lived farther back in the interior. People on the lake shore were richer than we were. People in "Hardscrabble" were poorer than we were. The difference was so marked as to be perfectly evident to all. When I later returned as a teacher of history and government, using scientific methods, the causes of these differences were perfectly apparent. The people of the lake shore possessed rich soil because their lands had once been lake bottom. That soil was easily drained because it had a subsoil of sand. The great lake kept away the late spring frosts and the early autumn frosts, which so often destroyed the crops of our township. Finally the people of the lake front were located so near a great city that they marketed their vegetables and fruits directly to the consumer, thus saving the enormous profits of the railroads and the middlemen. We have here three primary causes of their wealth, our comfort, and the poverty of "Hardscrabble." In our township we had clay loam, upon which we produced, not a hundred dollars worth of fruits and vegetables to the acre, but fifteen or twenty dollars worth of hay or grain.

BEFORE THE INVENTION OF OUR PATENT AIR-PROOF POUCH GRAVELY PLUG TOBACCO MADE STRICTLY FOR ITS CHEWING QUALITY WOULD NOT KEEP FRESH IN THIS SECTION. NOW THE PATENT POUCH KEEPS IT FRESH AND CLEAN AND GOOD. A LITTLE CHEW OF GRAVELY IS ENOUGH AND LASTS LONGER THAN A BIG CHEW OF ORDINARY PLUG.

In "Hardscrabble" the loam on the clay was so thin that much of the land did not pay the working. Hence the extreme poverty. On the lake front the people paid their preacher $1500 a year. We paid ours $500 a year. In "Hardscrabble" they paid their preacher $350 a year and the poor man took it out mostly in sour milk, pumpkins, and last year's dried apples. In the lake front the school teacher received $75 a month. They had a high school and nearly every boy and girl was prepared for college. In our township the school teacher received $50 a month and very few were prepared for college.

How Geography Works

Geography had marked the three populations with relentless thoroughness, not only as regards their minds, but as regards their bodies. On the lake front they were all stand-pat republicans. In "Hardscrabble" they were mostly populists. On the lake front people were healthy and vigorous. In "Hardscrabble" they were lean, angular and much afflicted by dyspepsia, rheumatism and consumption.

Originally these were exactly the same sort of people who had come out of New England into the Western Reserve of Ohio and settled the three districts. Now they represented three different social types. Take the people from the lake front and put them in "Hardscrabble" and in 100 years you will have "Hardscrabble" people again. Take the people of "Hardscrabble" and put them on the lake front, and in 100 years they will resemble the lake front people of today. So you see the physical geography is an absolute monarch ruling over human bodies and human minds.

Why Turkey Falls Apart

Now let us apply the same method to the life of Europe. The empire of various parts. Turkey has no industrial system to unite those parts. If she had modern mines, factories, railroads and banks she would become a great nation. Without these means of modern life and power her raveling edges have fallen a prize to her neighbors. Now finally her capital, Constantinople, so long the subject of jealous greed on the part of great rival powers of Europe, is clutched at once by Russia and Germany.

Russia Needs an Outlet

Both Russia and Germany need Constantinople for commercial and imperialistic expansion. Russia looks out on the world and sees that without a warm-water Atlantic port she cannot become a truly great nation. She is backward not because her mind is less keen than the mind of Germany or of France. She is backward because her geography has made her backward. Civilization could originally develop only in those countries which have had seaports and sea commerce. Now we have come to the day of railroad civilization. River steamships and railroads have permitted the United States to become a great nation. Russia had to await the coming of the railroad. Today her turn has come. She has 182,000,000 of people; in 25 years she will have 364,000,000. In a hundred years she will have 1,000,000,000 people. Germany, France and Italy will then be second or third class powers like Sweden, Denmark and Switzerland are today.
