

Between You and Me

by Joe Jolly

Wireless Simplicity

Has it ever dawned on you that a wireless telephone receiving outfit can be installed in your home at less expense than the cost of a real good phonograph? Well, just between you and me, it can be done for less than $100. And a real live boy with some aptitude for electrical performances may get the same results for less money than dad smokes up in a month.

The fact is that the receiving set is quite simple, requires scant experience to operate, and in these days is becoming genuinely entertaining. A man in Portland, who could easily afford the finest equipment to be had, has stretched an aerial receiver from his back porch to the garage and is now spending his evenings at home, listening to what the radio waves have to say. Why not try something like that on dad?

The sending apparatus is much more elaborate and costly—requires a government license to operate and naturally necessitates the creation of something worth sending. But what the others are sending is as free as air to everybody.

Character in Architecture

Do you ever notice the features and characteristics so plainly discernable on the face of a splendid building—even as on the face of an individual? The new Bank of Commerce, as it nears completion, suggests how character may be revealed in architecture and left for many generations to read.

A typical bank building almost invariably utilizes the classic perpendicular column. The larger city banks often devote hundreds of square feet of valuable frontage to these massive columns for the sole purpose of establishing that impressive air of strength and stability, which is so necessary in the banking business.

You will observe that these pillars are of even size, huge and solid in design—seemingly capable of bearing a much greater weight than they are ever called upon to carry. In contrast to the above, notice how those of an educational structure are apt to be of a more frail design, slightly tapering and graceful in form, rather striving to uphold the ideal than to bear the crushing burden of the masses.

We have touched only one architectural tradition; think of the meanings suggested by the building's general form, arrangement of openings, nature of trimmings, depth of the cornice and even the harmony of color values.

How Are We Going to Know Them?

When a gent in rural uniform knocks on your door and invites you to purchase a sack of spuds or a box of apples, what way have you of knowing whether he hails from down on the farm or has only lately arrived from front street?

Residents of town are usually anxious to get what the farmer has to offer because there is a satisfaction in knowing that it is fresh, carefully selected and good enough for a producer to stake his reputation on. We are all wise to the manipulations of the commission house hucksters—usually to the tune of disreputable produce and disordered dispositions. We do not need those birds who fly over here with their dubious stuff. However, we do need the genuine, honest-to-gosh farmer. Also, he needs to sell his products at a profit so that he will have the courage to raise us some more and keep us all from having to produce those things ourselves.

It is not right to legislate any legitimate business out of existence but Oregon City people ought to take quite an active interest in making sure that they are buying Clackamas county farm products.

Structural Stability

How are you impressed as the immense steel fabrics of the new arch bridge goes into place? Does it seem to you to be capable of carrying the ever increasing stream of traffic as the years roll by? Some of the old Revolutionary bridges of Yorktown and Concord fame are still standing (I do not claim to know how often they have been repaired or renewed). Will this bridge last for a century? It certainly looks as though it would.

Until concrete crumbles and iron falls to hopeless decay his mighty structure should survive the years with perfect ease—because it is properly designed, is huge in form and frame, rigid, strong and capable. If traffic of the future should take to air, as now seems possible, the wear on all bridges would be less. And, unless people take to joy riding on traction engines and engines and tractors, there will probably be nothing more disastrous to public rights of way than the present-day automobile and truck.

Anticipating no more destructive traffic developments in the future, let us prophesy that the new arch, which we are so proudly watching arise today, will round out a full century.

Success.

Typist—There's someone knocking. Why don't you answer?

Office Boy—If it's the boss, I'll get that raise. He told me this morning that every knock was a boost.—Wayside Tales.

That Little.

"Man wants but little here below." You've oft heard someone swear it.

The women only know that it is so And that is why they wear it.—Wayside Tales.

THE PEOPLE'S SAY

Too True to Make a Joke

Among some refined ladies who visited the O. C. H. S. wrestling arena on or about February 10th, my Aunt Mary was interested spectator. The following are a few reflections and observations prepared with a little sarcasm she objects to. "I was induced to attend the feats of twisting wrists, arms, necks and lower extremities 'round and round' whether or not these members belong to the Ball-and-socket joints or operate best in some other less painful movement." The science seems to lie in the fact that the athlete of superior strength and cunning may be able to force the twisting process in such manner as to cause the greatest pain, this ending the needless science of "bull-dogging." (pardon the term—no reflections).

Prominent among other scientific movements somewhat more humane were those of strangling and causing the mouth and face to bite the rubber mat until the eye is blinded and the facial appearance having been burned and rasped in the process of the science which I fancy will remind the athlete for the two weeks following, what science may do for him.

Well, I shall say further if all parents whose boys are gored after this style of scientific athletics were to witness the demonstration—would cry out let them proceed—as such, they are less harmful and more humane than dancing in the public schools.
