WHY HER WATCH GOES WRONG

Various Causes Given for Undoubted Fact That Woman's Timepiece is Generally Incorrect.

Punctuality is said to be the virtue of kings, but not of women. The latter will not, however, admit their lack of it. But when a lady has kept a mere hour waiting for her an indelicately long time her excuse, cynics declare, is really at hand: "My watch must be wrong." And, strange to say, this reason given as an excuse, different from other excuses, is almost always valid. The watches of women are much less exact than those of men.

An Englishman, Herbert Duke, who occupied himself with this problem in profound speculations, thinks he has traced it to its source. He has observed that the same watch, when worn by his wife, runs very irregularly, whereas when worn by him it is perfectly correct. "Now, how is it," he asks, "that so many women have such a baleful influence on watches?"

Certainly much is due to the fact that to women the watch is a less necessary tool of life than a beautiful adornment; that they care more for its looking elegant on the wrist than for its being right; that they handle carelessly and inconsiderately this delicate apparatus.

But there must be another more potent cause. It has been observed that the electricity contained in the human body exerts a direct influence on the delicate mechanism of the watch. It may be that the small form of a woman's watch renders it very sensitive to the electro-magnetic influence that emanates from the body.

SNAKES HAVE LARGE 'LITTERS'

Boa Constrictor, in Captivity, Gave Birth to Sixty-Four Living Young—Others Perishing.

The sixteen-foot Trinidad anaconda, or water boa, at the London Zoological gardens, not long ago gave birth to twenty-four young ones. The newborn snakes were twenty-six inches long and about an inch in diameter at the thickest part of the body. In color and marking they resembled the adults—that is, they were of a dark greenish hue with black spots.

That number of young had been exceeded by a seventeen-foot snake at the New York Zoological park, which produced thirty-four young. Still another anaconda has been known to produce thirty-seven at a birth, and a large specimen of boa constrictor gave birth to sixty-four living young. The pythons differ from the boas in that they lay eggs and coil around a heap of them until they hatch. An official of the New York Zoo says that the pythons produce from fifty to a hundred eggs at a time, and a specimen of python reticulatus deposited sixty eggs, about which she coiled, and from which she fought off all intruders, but her efforts proved of no avail, for the eggs were infertile.
