Canned Foods and Vitamins

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A bulletin has just been prepared by Dr. E. F. Kohnman, of the Research Laboratory of the National Canners Association, which brings together all the research literature relative to the effect cooking has on vitamins. This research demonstrates that canned foods supply the vitamins as abundantly as the same foods cooked in the ordinary way. The vitamin content is the greatest when foods are at the proper stage of maturity for consumption and decreases when the foods are held for a period of time. The fact that canned foods are prepared in their prime and must be in this condition for canning is in favor of the canned product.

Canned tomatoes are said to be among the richest sources of all vitamins in any product. On the strength of their content of the antiscorbutic vitamin, canned tomatoes have been recommended by physicians to supplement pasteurized milk in infant feeding. Special use was also made of canned tomatoes in army rations because of the vitamins in them. Canned tomatoes have been stored for three years and still found to be as rich as ever in vitamins. This is longer than the antiscorbutic vitamin, which is the least stable of them all, can be kept by any other, known method.

Canned foods are processed in vacuum while foods cooked on the stove are exposed to the air, which is the cause of a considerable loss of vitamin C. From the experimental evidence now available, canned foods are found to be practically as rich in vitamin A and B as the corresponding fresh raw products. In acid products, such as tomatoes and fruits, there is only a negligible destruction of vitamin C by ordinary cooking or in the canning process.

What Are Vitamins?

In view of the popular discussion of vitamins and what they actually are, their function as outlined to the canners is interesting.

"They supply the body with neither energy nor tissue-building substances. They may be likened to a spark plug. The energy produced in the spark plug does not aid in propelling the engine. Nor is the fuel of any account in running the engine so long as it remains in the form of gasoline. The spark plug, however, ignites it, producing a change whereby it does become useful as a source of energy. By some means, still unknown to us, the vitamins enable the body to utilize the energy-producing and tissue-building components of our foods, which would be useless to us without the vitamins. They play a part in addition to the role of the spark plug in that they have something to do with the construction of the engine; that is, they regulate the assimilation of the tissue-building portions of the diet."

"The vitamins are also different in properties, so far as we know their properties, from other food constituents. They are active in extremely minute quantities. In this respect they bear about the same relation to the rest of our food as the energy produced by the spark plug bears to that generated by the gasoline."

At present it is universally agreed that there are at least three vitamins. These have been given a variety of names, but the simplest designation is to call them Vitamins A, B, and C. Vitamin A is found in milk and eggs, largely in their fat, in other animal products, particularly glandular tissues, in animal fats and fish oils, and in vegetables, especially the green leafy varieties. It has been found to play an important part in the growth of bones, although it has other, though less clearly defined functions in the life of both young and old.

Vitamin B is widely distributed in all classes of natural food products—in seeds, vegetables, and animal products. Its absence in the diet is harmful in man and polyneuritis in fowls. It is therefore known as the antineuritic vitamin. It may have some function in controlling the appetite. Vitamin C occurs abundantly in fruits, succulent vegetables and tubers, and in milk. Its absence in the diet results in scurvy, and hence it is called the antiscorbutic vitamin.

Vitamins Present in Canned Foods

It is said that fruits and vegetables in their prime are richer in vitamins than those which are left to stand around for ripening purposes or are help over for later sale. Therefore, the interesting argument is advanced that canned foods, which must necessarily be packed immediately after ripening, contain considerably more

CHURCHES ON RECORD AGAINST BIRTH CONTROL

Grave Dangers to Physical
And Moral Life are Pointed Out by Episcopalians In
Report on Home Condition

CHRISTIANITY IS SAID
TO BE ONLY REMEDY

Formal Presentation Will Take Place at Triennial
Convention in Portland.

NEW YORK, July 19.—The Episcopal church put itself on record in a report made public today by the joint commission on home and family life against birth control. The report is the work of six years, and it will be presented formally to the triennial general convention of that communion, to be held in Portland, Ore., beginning September 8 next.

The chairman of the commission, which was appointed when the triennial convention was held in St. Louis, is the Right Rev. William Hall Mooreland, bishop of Sacramento, Cal., and its secretary is the Rev. Dr. Charles M. Tyndall of Williamsport, Pa.

"This commission heartily endorses the warning uttered by the great Lambeth conference of bishops in London against the practice and control of means for the avoidance of conception and involving grave dangers to physical health as well as to moral innocence and threatening the human race," says the report in beginning its denunciation of birth control.

"Marriage is not to be regarded solely or chiefly as a means for happiness or physical pleasure. It is not an end in itself, but the divinely appointed agency whereby God's will may be fulfilled in giving life, protection and proper rearing to the young of the human species."
