IT IS SERIOUS

Some Oregon City People Fail to Realize Seriousness of a Bad Back

The constant aching of a bad back, The weariness, the tired feeling, The pains and aches of kidney ills May result seriously if neglected. Dangerous urinary troubles often follow.

An Oregon City citizen shows you what to do.

Mrs. A. Reddaway, 116 S. Center St., Oregon City, says: "My back ached most all the time. It was so weak and sore that when I got down to do anything it was all I could do to straighten up. Sharp catches ran through my kidneys and for a minute I could hardly move, as they were so severe. My kidneys also acted too freely. I felt tired all the time and could hardly drag myself around. After I had been taking Doan's Kidney Pills awhile, my back felt stronger and my kidneys acted more regularly."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Reddaway had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE STOCKMAN.

Manage the sheep and the pastures so the flock can have a fresh short bite.

Many people seem to forget that pigs need pasture.

It is easier to keep a horse's shoulders in good shape than it is to make them so after they have once been sore.

A small fat sheep is better than a large thin one.

It is better to confine hogs in a small lot when fattening, for in a large one they will run off fat as fast as they put it on.

Remember that the horses get wild for a drink of water when working, the same as you do.

When the man takes a drink let him give the horses a few swallows also.

MORE SHEEP ARE NEEDED ON FARMS

(By FRANK KLEINHEINZ, Wisconsin College of Agriculture.)

Instead of the low prices paid for mutton and wool several years ago a premium is now paid for both products. Recently last year's lambs were sold for 12 cents per pound (live weight) on the Chicago market. Spring lambs have been selling for from 14 to 17 cents a pound live weight. Wool is selling at this time for 32 to 34 cents a pound, the highest price paid since the civil war. These certainly are good prices, and there is promise that these products will continue to remain high on account of the shortage of both. Meat packers are forced to pay high prices for live mutton and lamb because of its scarcity. Woolen manufacturers likewise are paying high prices for wool because of the shortage. Wool is a necessity.

A prominent sheepman in addressing a large audience recently made the statement that sheep need a little more intelligent care than some of the other classes of live stock, but when farmers in Wisconsin and other states have familiarized themselves with the proper care of sheep, just as the man with the dairy cow and the woman with the chickens have done, then sheep husbandry can be carried on not only more extensively, but also with much greater success and profit.

The Shropshire sheep may be called a dual purpose animal as it produces a fine mutton carcass as well as a fair fleece of high grade wool. This breed is essentially one for the farm flock, while at the same time it is hardy and a good rustler for the ranges. The sheep shown is a Shropshire.

Sheep should again be raised on our Wisconsin farms. One of the directors of a county farm in this state says that last year they realized a net profit of about $2,000 on 150 breeding ewes. The land on which these sheep were grazed was rough and had been purchased for $20 an acre. This man, who is absolutely trustworthy, after figuring the cost of establishing the flock and of the feed and labor, stated that they had derived from the sheep a much higher net profit than from any other class of live stock kept on that farm. Another farmer who lives in a section of high priced land in southwestern Wisconsin purchased twenty-four common grade ewes in the fall of 1914. These ewes netted him $234 in a year for lambs and wool. He stated that their entire feed had been good pasture during the grass season and good clover hay in winter. No grain or other feed was used. He was out trying to buy more sheep and said that he was deriving far more profit from his sheep than from his cattle and hogs.

Although sheep have greatly advanced in price in the last few years, still a man can start a flock with a reasonable amount of money. The fall is the best time to purchase. At this time the western range men dispose of their surplus breeding ewes, and one can secure a small flock of from fifteen to twenty-five head without making a large investment. Sheep multiply fast and by the use of a good pure bred ram of any of the leading mutton breeds a fine flock will soon be established. A ram in many cases can be used by two farmers on small flocks in one or two breeding seasons, thereby lowering the cost of the ram.

Self Fed Hogs.

Which would you rather pocket, $23.35 profit a hog by feeding a ration made up of ninety-five parts corn, five parts tankage and alfalfa hay in racks or to flog a sixty-six-cent profit a hog by feeding corn alone? The Nebraska station got these respective profits to the hog by feeding in the two ways described.

A MAN IN A BOAT

By ETHEL HOLMES

Among the reasons for establishing the capital of the eastern Roman empire at Constantinople—it was first called Byzantium—was that the site was very beautiful. The Bosphorus, on which it is built, connecting the Black sea and the sea of Marmora, is one of the most attractive streams of water in the world. All manner of craft are sailing and steaming back and forth and across it, while the shore on either side, especially the European, is lined with attractive buildings.

On the European side of the Bosphorus—the side on which Constantinople is built—a portion of the water front is a park or garden free to the public. One day a Turkish woman, whose daughter was in delicate health and needed the air, took the girl to this place and, seating themselves near the margin of the water, looked out on the many boats plying back and forth across it. They were the only persons about, and any one passing on the walk behind them could only see their backs, their faces being turned to the water.

"Lift your veil, dear," said the mother, "that you may get the benefit of the breeze. No boats are passing near us, and your face cannot be seen."

The girl lifted her veil and, resting her head against her mother's shoulder, enjoyed the constantly moving panorama and the breeze cooled by the water. At times she closed her eyes for a brief nap, and her mother fell asleep. The daughter, after one of her cat naps, on opening her eyes found herself looking straight into the face of a young man sitting in a boat not a dozen yards from her. And the young man was gazing upon her rapturously.

Margarita, the young lady, instantly dropped her veil, but not soon enough to shut out the effect of that handsome, youthful face, those admiring eyes. The young man, who had approached without being seen or heard and had rested on his oars, gazing on the dazzling beauty, pulled away, but not so far but that he could keep the two women in sight. Margarita saw him far out in the stream and knew that to see her, even at a distance, was a pleasure to him.

In time the girl awakened her mother. They arose and walked away, for a time keeping on the shore westward, then, turning inland, ascending a rise in the ground to the house in which they lived. The man in the boat could observe them from the water and saw them go into their home.

It was not long after this that a proposition of marriage was made for Margarita's hand. Marriages in Turkey are made by the parents of the young persons, who are not permitted to see each other until after the wedding. Margarita, from whose mental vision the young man had seen her from his boat had never been dimmed, was filled with grief at this application. The social standing of the suitor and his financial condition were all that could be desired, and his suit was met with favor by Margarita's parents, so there was nothing for her to do but yield to her fate.

And yet, though there was something dreadful in her marrying with the memory of the vision she had seen constantly before her, why should she not do so? She had no reason to suppose she would ever again see the man who through that brief vision had captured her heart. And even if she did he would not see her, for it is not permitted in Turkey that a man shall look upon the face of any woman except his wife or one of his own blood.

While the preparations for the wedding were being made Margarita showed no interest in them. On the contrary, she grew thin and pale. Her health, which after her visit to the bank of the Bosphorus seemed to improve, was again delicate. Her mother frequently took her to the river, but without the previous effect. One day Margarita while there saw the young man she had seen before go by in his boat, but since all Turkish women, being veiled, look alike, he did not recognize her. How she longed to lift her veil and call to him! But even had her mother not been present and now aware she would not have done so, for to a Moslem girl would have been immodest. And what pained her was that while she was plunged in grief on account of him he seemed contented and happy.

The day of the wedding finally came around. The wedding guests were assembled in the groom's house—not at the bride's house, as in Christian countries—and were looking over the wedding presents while waiting for the bride to be brought. Then it was announced that she was at the door. The groom passed out to receive her, the guests lining up within, leaving a passage for the pair to enter.

Margarita stood veiled waiting for her betrothed who in another moment emerged from his house with a look of supreme happiness on his face. And behind Margarita's veil that look was repeated, though more intense in contrast with the dolorous expression that it replaced. For the groom's face was uncovered, and she recognized the man in the boat.

Having watched to see where she went after she had left the bank of the Bosphorus, he had tried to inquire who she was and make a proposition for her hand. But he dared not reveal himself as one who had seen the face of the girl he proposed for. This would in Turkey have created a scandal and would likely have resulted in his application being refused.

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system. To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion is nature's great blood-maker, while its medicinal nourishment strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and rebuild your strength. Scott's Emulsion is helping thousands every day who could not find other relief. Refuse the alcoholic substitutes.

SEVERAL ARE LUCKY

Clackamas County Folk Draw Colville Indian Land

The great governmental land lottery at Colville, Wash., is over, much to the satisfaction of at least six Clackamas county men who drew lucky numbers, although none of them was near the top of the list.

The fortunate few are Thomas Evans of Oregon City; Robert J. Cockrell of Molalla; John C. Steenks, of Cherryville, Edward Richardson and C. P. Henkle of Oregon City, and Cyril Grey, of Sandy. A score or more of Clackamas county residents filed among several hundred from the state of Oregon. A Spokane man drew the first number and gets his choice of the valuable land.

Clarence E. Dittmer, of Gervais, and Joseph Wilson, of Aurora, were also among the lucky few from this vicinity.

The Colville drawing was one of the last of the famous governmental divisions of Indian reservation lands. For that reason as much as any other, people flocked to filing places from all parts of the United States.

Those from Clackamas county report a great scene at the drawing. Great crowds, containing American citizens of all nationalities, filed and attended the drawing. A number of these foreigners were successful in the contest.

Some of the Colville lands are in 40-acre tracts, but for the most part it is in 160-acre pieces. The first person to draw has his choice of the plots and the best tract in the Colville reservation is said to be worth close to $15,000.

CADY MAY GO

All Agree Flax Experiment Can Be Made Financial Success

J. C. Cady, superintendent of the Oregon penitentiary flax plant, faces probable removal by the State Board of control as soon as the insurance on the flax lost in the recent prison fire is adjusted.

This became apparent late last week at a meeting of the Board of control, when State Treasurer Kay announced that he stood with Secretary Olcott for a change in superintendent of the flax plant. Mr. Cady's successor probably will not be chosen immediately, as the flax plant will not begin operations on the new crop for several months. The crop is now being harvested by convicts in charge of prison officials.

At the meeting Governor Withycombe said that he still had confidence in Mr. Cady's ability. He charged that the superintendent had not had the cooperation of R. B. Goodin, secretary of the Board of control, and officials at the penitentiary. Despite this, he declared he was convinced the flax industry could be made a success. Other members of the board agreed with the executive in this last statement.

TRADE RECORD MADE

Greatest Year in History Recorded in Foreign Trade

The war notwithstanding and hue and cry set up about and against the democratic administration shown to be nearly 100 per cent talk, the following report of the Federal Department of Commerce is interesting and instructive:

Foreign trade of the United States closed its greatest year in history June 30 with a balance of $2,136,000,000 in favor of American exporters. The year's exports aggregated $4,334,000,000, and imports were valued at $2,198,000,000. The trade balance was double that of last year and four times that of 1914. Exports exceeded those of last year by $1,500,000,000.

The exact foreign trade figures announced, differing slightly from preliminary estimates, show the year's exports exceed the annual average from 1911 to 1914 by more than $2,000,000. Gold imports for the year aggregated $404,000,000, compared with $25,000,000 last year.

In June exports amounted to $465,000,000, an increase of about $20,000,000 over last June, but a decrease of about $10,000,000 from May.

Imports for the year, $2,198,000,000, exceeded by $524,000,000 the 1915 total and the annual average from 1911 to 1914 by $475,000,000. June imports were valued at $246,000,000, the largest ever shown in a single month, being $17,000,000 more than the figures for May and $88,000,000 more than those of June, 1915.
