MR. HUGHES' PREDICAMENT

If Charles E. Hughes, republican candidate for president, makes an issue of the Federal Reserve system, established by the democratic administration, is he going to read out of his party the 33 republicans who voted for the measure in the house?

Will he repudiate the 16 progressives, the one independent, and the republicans who voted with the 248 democrats in establishing the sound banking and currency law which has been approved by the public and the banking world?

Will he also repudiate the 7 republicans who voted for them in the senate?

Mr. Hughes will have a difficult time evolving any issue that will not entail a repudiation of many of the congressional leaders of his own party.

If he thinks it expedient to adopt a strong attitude on the submarine controversy, which President Wilson settled by obtaining a full recognition of American rights under international law and bringing about the cessation of submarine warfare, he will have to repudiate the 101 republican representatives who voted against tabling the McInerney resolution and thus registered themselves in favor of a surrender of American rights. Incidentally, he will have to read out of the republican party the twelve republicans United States senators who voted against tabling the Gore resolution, which involved a similar surrender when President Wilson was forcing the recognition of American rights.

There were 12 republicans in the senate who voted for the administration's Trade Commission bill, and while there was no record vote in the house, several score republicans voted for the Trade Commission bill there.

The republican party in its platform has endorsed the tariff commission method of handling the tariff. Before that plank was adopted by the republican party, the democratic administration had introduced the Rainey Tariff Commission bill in congress and it will become a law in a few weeks. And the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, representing the business men of the nation, republican and democratic and progressive, has endorsed the Rainey bill.

One hundred and twelve republicans and four progressives voted with the democratic majority for the good roads bill in the house. One hundred and four republicans and three progressives voted for the administration's Rural Credits bill.

Republican leaders of the house and senate repeatedly have endorsed the president's action in keeping out of war with Mexico. If a vote were taken in the house and senate today on remaining at peace with Mexico, the republicans would vote for peace so long as President Wilson is able, as he has been, to preserve the honor of the nation.

It was interesting to see how far Mr. Hughes goes in repudiating his own party in his speech of acceptance.

KAISER BILL'S PROPOSAL

Kaiser Bill, that master of Teutonic warfare, that ruler hardened by the sanguinary struggle of the past two years, torn from the hearts of the brotherhood of civilized nations largely through a misrepresentation of his warlike activities, has himself made known his heartfelt desire for an honorable peace for the brave souls of the Fatherland.

Kaiser Bill is not to be showered with the delight of a reversal of all that he has been accused of simply because he has uttered a peace manifesto, but he is to be honored for the position he takes on the second anniversary of the terrible carnage that is depopulating his great nation and those of his enemies. In a communication to Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the imperial chancellor, on Tuesday, Kaiser Bill said:

"Still hard times are ahead. After the terrible storm of two years of war, a desire for sunshine and peace is stirring in all human hearts, but the war continues because the battle cry of the enemy governments is still the destruction of Germany. Blame for further bloodshed falls further on our enemies. The firm confidence has never left me that Germany is invincible in spite of the superior numbers of our enemies, and every day confirms this anew.

"Germany knows she is fighting for her existence. She knows her strength and she relies on God's help. Therefore nothing can shake her determination or her assurance. We shall bring this struggle to such an end that our empire will be protected against future attack and that a free field will be assured for the peaceful development for German genius and labor.

"We shall live free, secure and strong among the nations of the world. This right, nobody shall or will snatch from us."

The kaiser is to find a wide difference of opinion among the enemy governments and among the people of neutral nations as to the outcome of the conflict. He is to find that he will have a grave problem to solve if he is to bring the war to such a settlement as his dreams direct. He is to find that the blame for the continuation of the struggle is not altogether where he thinks it is.

The only way the kaiser can accomplish his dreams of sunshine and peace is to humble himself just a little bit in the settlement of his troubles with the allies.

And in spite of all the shortcomings he seems to have in the minds of his enemies and un-neutrals seems to speak from the courage of a strong heart when he prays that his great nation may live free, secure and strong among the nations of the world.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

The labor union directly concerned in the threatened railroad strike, should be forced to arbitrate their differences with the railroad companies. The latter are making every effort to bring about a settlement of the disputes through arbitration and up to date the unions have arrogantly refused to consider such a plan of action.

Unionism has been given so much rope, much of it justly, it is true, that they are free in their demands for more and when they find the other end held tight they assume the arrogant attitude that spells defeat for their lofty and usually worthy ambitions. Unionism is undoubtedly a good thing for the laboring man. Its only fault in the public eye is that it does not grant to the workingman that God-given freedom that was granted to him under the constitution of these United States. The constitution seems to infringe a little bit at times upon the field of unionism, disgruntling the latter to a great degree.

The Courier does not uphold the railroad companies in their policy toward its employees, especially with regard to the length of the working day. The railroad men, because of the nature of their work, are even more entitled to short hours than the average worker.

The Courier is not right certain that every demand of the employees is just as worthy as it might be.

Settlement of the questions should be through arbitration. If the men hold to their demands and refuse to arbitrate the entire system of railroads in the western country will be tied up at an enormous expense to the traveling public and to the railroad companies, not to mention the untold suffering, privation and pestilence that will creep into the lives and homes of the strikers.

Bombs and bullets are gradually being replaced in the conduct of warfare by diplomacy and boards of arbitration. When that exalted condition in the transaction of the quarrels of the world arrives there will be fewer quarrels.

Labor troubles will never be settled properly until they are settled by arbitration. Labor wars are akin to civil wars and as unionism grows older and stronger, which is as it should be, its wars are of constantly increasing terror and danger to all concerned. If labor leaders will not submit their troubles willingly to a board of arbitration some way should be devised to force them to do so, if not for the greatest good to themselves, then for the greatest good to the public and the nation.

TWO YEARS OF WAR

Perhaps the enormous cost of the great European struggle is only a small part of its awful history at the end of its first two years—years that will blot the pages of the world's history with the blood of millions of men and women—years that will set civilization back on haunches so weakened by financial and physical loss that a full recovery will be a matter of many weary years.

As to the cost of the war, however, there are interesting figures. Germany, for the most part waging an offensive warfare, taking great areas of the enemies' territory, capturing thousands of the enemies' soldiers and achieving a notable fame for the thoroughness of her equipment and arms, has spent vastly less money than the entente allies. England alone has expended a clean billion dollars more than the great Teutonic power. Russia alone has spent a small half billion less than Germany, with the total expense to Great Britain and Russia practically double the cost of warfare to Germany.

The cost of the war during its first two years on the ledgers of all belligerent powers is represented by a grand total of $55,710,000,000. Astounding!

The entente allies, England, France and Russia carrying the major burden, have spent $36,600,000,000 as compared with the expense to the central powers, represented principally by Germany, of $18,750,000,000.

Great Britain alone has spent $13,000,000,000; Russia, $11,500,000,000; France $5,500,000,000. All of which stands against the $12,000,000,000 spent by the German government.

Verily, the cost of the war may be one of its minor disgraces, but it is one of a thousand things that make us wonder if the struggle is worth while. Of course, it is admitted that it is not.

HAVE SEIZED THE ROAD

Arrogant autocrats of the road are the automobile aristocracy. They virtually have appropriated the public highway, that common property of the whole people, to their own selfish pleasure.

No more do we see the hayrack, loaded with merry, shouting young people on their way to a harvest party.

No more the young swain, courting his sweetheart in his shining buggy, while Old Dobbin trots lazily ahead.

No more are boards laid across the box of the old farm wagon, to provide seats for the whole family, including the hired man, so all can go to church together.

All these vehicles of innocent pleasure are crowded from the common road by dazzle-eyed, fire-breathing, thunder-spitting dragons, which tear up the highway paid for by taxes collected from all the property of all the people.

We who drive our autos over the people's roads are not such a bad lot, though; we enjoy being hospitable with our machines, and between tours are sometimes almost human. As a class, we are willing to contribute something like our just share towards the cost of maintaining the roads we destroy, and will welcome a big increase in the automobile registration fee, so the extra money spent on the roads will relieve the general taxpayer of part of the burden of highway improvement.—(Oregon Voter.)

SEEN FROM THE OPTIMIST'S TOWER

Last week's Lincoln County Leader ran the following headline, "A HORSE IS MORE VALUABLE WHEN IT IS BROKEN—BUT WITH A MAN IT IS DIFFERENT." Surely this will make its delinquent subscribers pay up!

The announcement that the Clackamas Teachers' Training School convenes under the efficient direction of our able County Superintendent, J. E. Calavan, from July 31 to August 18, makes me wonder if it was a Clackamas County teacher who received the following epistle:

Miss Blikens, maam—
I do not desire that my Matty engage in grammar, and I prefer her to engage in more useful subjects, and can learn her to write and speak proper myself. I went through two grammars and can't say as they done me no good. I prefer Matty to engage in German and drawing and vocal music on the piano.

Yours,
Mrs. Johnsing.

Mrs. J. was probably akin to the Mr. Johnsing who had just been introduced to his prospective mother-in-law. Mabel escaped for a few moments to put a finishing touch on her back hair, and Jonas tried bashfully in his own blushes. Mother groped around vainly for a topic for conversation, when she had a happy inspiration.

"Oh, Mr. Johnsing," she asked, "have you read 'Freckles'?"
He blushed about two shades deeper and stammered: "No—no—maam, mine are brown."

Which reminds us that the wife of a certain Hindu official in Western India died when under the treatment of a lady doctor connected with one of the missions. A few days later she received this letter from the disconsolate husband:

"Dear and Fair Madam:
I have much pleasure to inform you that my dearly unfortunate wife will be no longer under your kind treatment, she having left this world for the other on the night of the 27th ultimo. For your help in this matter I shall ever remain grateful.
Yours reverently,
Tipoo Singh."

There is a paper published in Portland which had for its subject matter last week one and a quarter columns of sports, the record of a tenderloin raid, a rotten "love" escapade, 3 court cases, 40 sheriff's sale notices, nearly three pages of summons and the stories of seven divorce suits. Maybe its publishers had the Hindu gentleman's state of mind in their subconsciousness, and the divorce cases in their eye, when they named their effusion the "Sunday Welcome."

"Henry Boeckman is going around these days with his right hand done up in splints. He slapped 'Bossy' on the side with the back of his hand and broke several bones."

—Oswego Times.
Which did she use, Henry, flat-iron or rolling pin? The Optimist is great on preparedness. He always kisses and makes up before actual hostilities break out.

As a people we love to monkey with fool legislation. Once in a while someone puts over on us a joker so cleverly concealed that no one sees it until we try to work it out. If he does it skillfully we forgive him. But we have no patience with the bungler who tries to work us for a passel of fools. Such is the attempt of the so-called "Brewer's amendment." It is as full of jokers as a yellow cur is of fleas, but the disgusting thing about it is that they are so bunglingly concealed that even an Englishman can see the point. Reminds me of the speech of the attorney for the defense in the case of Casey vs. McGinnis. Casey called McGinnis an "Irish skunk." When he had recovered sufficiently to be presentable he sued Mack for assault and battery. A kid lawyer, just admitted to the bar, made this plea for the defense:

"Gentlemen of the jury: I claim that my client merely asserted his manhood as any red blooded man would under like provocation. The way you would have done, Mr. Smith, had Mr. Casey called you an "American skunk," or you, Mr. Kreuger, had he called you a "German skunk," or you, Mr. Cameron, had he called you a "Scotch skunk," or any of you gentlemen had he called you the kind of skunk that you are."

We get the same general effect when we read the "Brewer's amendment." For instance there are now but four purposes for which liquor can be sold in the state. The insertion of a comma makes five, and removes all qualifying limitation from two of these. It can now be dispensed for (1) mechanical, (2) sacramental, (3) scientific, and (4) "Medicinal purposes upon prescription of a licensed physician."

In the proposed amendment a comma is inserted between the words "Medicinal purposes," and "Upon prescription of a licensed physician." Now the latter phrase qualifies the former. The common divorces them as thoroughly as the Oregon City court does damaged affinities. Both are made independent and co-ordinate. Hence, if this amendment passes, any old geek can sign an affidavit that he has a pain downstairs in his anatomy somewhere, and draw as much bug juice as will keep him pickled for a week. Or any physician can write a prescription for anything from an evil conscience to the seven years itch. The common makes it that it no longer has to be for "medicinal purposes."

Another joker lies in the fact that in common law a manufacturer can do through an agent what he would do himself. To allow the manufacturer to sell in the state direct to the buyer will be to permit him to sell through any drug store, hotel, grocery, confectionery, boarding house, or livery stable. The liquor must be dispensed in the original package, but that is the bottle, which will be made from five cents value up. The buyer can drink on the premises, or wherever he likes. If this law passes every dry town in the state will have its wholesale liquor stores, selling from a five cent bottle up, and every bootlegger will be made a brewer's agent, and will be able to sell until doomsday, or until we make the state really truly dry, and you will not be able to hinder him. Agents will be appointed in every rural community, and you cannot keep them out. There is no Local Option law in Oregon now. They can even run Brewery wagons out through the country, and no one will be able to stop them. This piece of unsavory legislation was fathered by the devil, mothered by the Boozie Trust, and is wet-nursed by a bunch of respectable geese who value the dollar sign more than they do the preservation of the state's sobriety and the development of its manhood.

After reading the list of names on the "Brewery Amendment," and looking in vain for that of a W. C. T. U. woman, or a mother in the church, the optimist has a fellow feeling for the old woman who went to hear an Anti-Suffragette lecturer. He held up a pig's rib and said:

"Ladies, this is what the first of your sex was made of."
"Yes," responded the old lady coolly, "And from very much the same kind of a critter."

The Portland News reports that Dr. Fred Kellogg, an Osteopath of Providence, R. I., cures headache by pressing a toothbrush against the roof of his victim's mouth. We have known an Osteopath to extract the contents of our pocket-book by simply pressing his thumbs against the joints of our backbone.

Everybody loves the man who always remains a boy. His top may go to seed like that of a ripe dandelion, and the down may all be blown away, but if his heart is ever green his polished knob is forgiven. James Whitcomb Riley was a man to whom babies and puppies came instinctively. No higher tribute can be paid to the man, for these are the best judges of character upon earth. What a great sympathetic heart he had! Through "Leonainie," copied after Poe, he first won recognition as a poet. Admirers of his named their baby girl "Leonainie." But the tiny flower was too fair and too fragile for this realm of chilling winds and frigid hearts, so God took her home to blossom in the gardens of Paradise. Then in her memory the poet wrote the following verse:

"Leonainie! Angels nursed her—
Baby angels—they
Who behind the stars had kissed her
E'er she came away;
And their little wondering faces
Drooped o'er Heaven's hiding places
Whiter than the lily vases
On the Sabbath day."

Today the singer's song is silent. Only a little handful of much-loved clay reposes in state in the capital of his native commonwealth, for the poet's soul has fled, and the world's childhood mourns.

—The Optimist.

WAR TWO YEARS OLD

Germans Have Gained Much Territory in Past Twelvemonth

The end of the second year of the great war finds the Germans in possession of more of Europe than they held on August 1, 1915, the first anniversary of the start of the great conflict.

This is practically the only respect in which the situation is more favorable to them. Russia, her vast man power at last organized and furnished with implements of destruction in plenty, is battering the Teuton lines on the east and has already won back 4500 square miles. Great Britain boasts five million men in her army and navy. France fights as strongly as ever. Italy is increasing her formidable ranks.

Austria appears to be losing heart and efficiency. Bulgaria refuses to send reinforcements to the west or Russian fronts. Turkey shows slight offensive power. The British navy, following the much disputed naval battle of Jutland, still shuts off Germany from use of the seas. One merchant submarine has reached America, but the supplies which can be brought over to the besieged nations in U-boats will be of little account.

Germany and Austria both feel the pinch of hunger. Their armies are sufficiently fed, but their industrial workers complain of lack of nourishment. The present harvest is watched with anxiety and if it fails or is only of fair size, famine will stalk in to the situation next spring, or earlier.

CANTON STEW.—Put two cupsful of finely shredded cabbage in enough water to boil and let cook slowly until tender, which should be in about three-quarters of an hour. When the cabbage has been cooking one-half hour add one cupful of milk, and when it is nearly done put in two cupsful of milk. Let boil up once, then season with salt and pepper and pour in a hot dish, in which should be put one teaspoonful of butter. If you like oyster crackers serve with these.

Brawn.—Buy a meaty shank—four or five pounds. Boil until quite well done, remove from liquid, put lean meat through meat chopper, add salt, pepper and sage to taste and moisten with beef liquor. Press down hard in dish. Have dish small enough so it will be filled about full. Place a plate over it, weighted down with an iron. Let it stand over night in a cool place. Slice when cold. Very tasty and economical. This, with a nice vegetable or tomato soup makes a remainder of liquor, makes a good dinner.

Baked Fillet of Beef Tongue.—Boil a large beef tongue one hour in salted water, then cut in pieces suitable for serving. Place in a baking pan, add one tablespoonful each of chopped carrot, turnip, onion, celery and parsley, pour in one cupful of the water in which the tongue was boiled, cover and bake slowly for about two hours, basting frequently; then remove the cover, bake until brown and transfer to a heated dish. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, blend in three tablespoonfuls of flour, add slowly one cupful of strained liquor from the pan and one cupful of strained tomatoes, stir and cook until smooth and thick, then pour the sauce over the meat.

Beef Broth.—Purchase one and one-half pounds of soup meat and have the butcher give you a bone. Wipe the meat with a damp cloth and put on with two quarts of boiling water, a small piece of onion, a small piece of carrot, a small piece of bay leaf, one teaspoonful of salt, a little pepper and a few eggshells. Cook slowly two hours. If it has boiled down add more water. One and one-half quarts of stock are needed. Strain through cheesecloth and add one tablespoonful of caramel. Set aside to get cool. This is better if made the day before. Heat and serve in cups.
