IRRIGATIONISTS CONVEY

El Paso Largest City From Which Trip Can Be Made

One of the pleasant surprises in store for those who witness the dedication by President Wilson of the $10,000,000 Elephant Butte dam and who participate in the deliberations of the International Irrigation congress or the International Farm congress and Soil Products exposition, all of which will take place between Saturday, Oct. 14 and Tuesday, Oct. 24, next, will be a trip into romantic and mysterious Mexico, at least as far as the street cars will take one into Juarez, El Paso's sister city on the south bank of the Rio Grande.

El Paso is the largest city in the United States from which a trip may be made into a foreign country where language, manners, customs, mode of dress and styles in architecture are so absolutely different from the American conception of those details of life as they are in Mexico, and the trip may be made at a cost of five cents in money and 15 minutes if the tripper has no more time to spare.

El Paso is probably the only point in the world where a traveler may pass in so short a time from the civilization of the 20th century as expressed by the modern American city of El Paso to the civilization of the 16th century as found in the city of Juarez, the largest Mexican city on the long international line stretching from the mouth of the Rio Grande on the east to San Diego, Cal., on the west, a distance of 2000 miles.

The traveler is not required to go far into the interior of the country which has been featured so liberally as the hot bed of revolution, by the newspapers of the world during the past five or six years, to find men and women living as they lived in Christ's time.

The houses built of sun dried bricks made of mud and straw, described in the old testament; the land being cultivated by means of plows made of crooked sticks and harrowed by means of bundles of brush drawn by oxen, the wooden wheeled carts, the burden bearing burros, the reaping of grain with sickles and the threshing of it by running herds of ponies or goats over it on earthen threshing floors, all will remind readers of the Bible of the customs which prevailed in the time of Moses and others who wrote the sacred books.

The old missions of California have long been fabled in song and story, yet there is a mission in Juarez and another at Ysleta, Texas, a suburb of El Paso, where were nearly 200 years old before the foundation of the first California mission was laid. It is true the architecture of the missions of this section of the United States is not as ornate as that of the California missions, so far as may be judged from the ruins, but it marks the difference in temperament between the Franciscan fathers who passed this way in the train of the early Spanish conquistadores and of the Jesuit priests who traveled in the wake of the later explorers who devoted themselves to the discovery and subjugation of what is now known as California.

The part played by the followers and successors of Cortez, the conqueror of the Montezumas, in the settlement and development of what is now southwestern United States, will always have an interest for even the most casual reader of American history and nowhere else can the evidences of the endeavors of these pioneers of the western world be studied at first hand as they can at El Paso and its immediate environs.

These little journeys, whether into Mexico or up and down the Rio Grande on the American side of the river, may be taken in perfect safety. While there are in the neighborhood of 40,000 American troops stationed in El Paso and patrolling the boundary line and while the soldiers are much in evidence on El Paso's streets, the tide of travel between El Paso and Juarez is as high now as it was in the days of the profound peace which characterized the good old days when Porfirio Diaz was at the helm of the Mexican ship of state and Mexicans and Americans mingle in amity as though their respective governments were not at loggerheads.

During the time the irrigation and farm congresses are being held there will be a series of military maneuvers at El Paso in which the largest number of troops ever gotten together in the United States will participate. Owing to absence of forests and the peculiar lay of the land the war game which will be played on so grand a scale may be witnessed from points of vantage which will accommodate hundreds of thousands of spectators should it happen there might be that many to occupy them.

SCHOOLS OPENING HERE THIS WEEK

increase in the attendance at high schools and will mean that a large number of children who would otherwise not continue their education will at least go through the high school grades.

The cost of sending pupils from districts which do not maintain high schools is borne by the county. This takes the burden of expense off the shoulders of parents and permits them to encourage higher education and to submit more willingly to the ambitions of the children.

The average high school tuition cost per day in Clackamas county, as estimated by Superintendent Calavan, is slightly over 30 cents. This is for high schools alone, for the tuition law does not apply to grade schools. The highest tuition cost last year was estimated at Milwaukie, where the cost to the county for the education of pupils from other districts was almost 41 cents a day. The lowest cost was at the Oregon City high school, where the cost per day was slightly more than 21 cents. Costs of the other districts were: Colton, 40c; Estacada, 34c; Molalla, 24c; Canby, 25c; and Sandy 29c.

FROST CRITICIZED

Father Says Dance Contributes to Juvenile Downfall

Editor Courier: I notice in Tuesday's Enterprise that Juvenile Officer Frost airs himself quite freely on the child question. Now we certainly agree with Juvenile Officer Frost that the boy or man that is guilty of the ruin of a girl should receive the greater punishment, and I guess that everyone does, excepting the courts, for it seems that they all get off with a small fine or reprimand. But it seems that the juvenile officer has it in for the parents and society. We have no doubt but that the Officer is a model father and always knows where his children are even every hour and minute, and I presume that other parents try and keep a watchful eye on their children just as well as Juvenile Officer Frost does, but they do get away.

Now if we have on our street corners young hoodlums, as the Juvenile officer seems to call them, who are just as ready to jump onto a girl as a hungry dog after a bone, why doesn't this watchful officer arrest them, punish instead of so much bombast in the newspaper. He is a peace officer and has the power. And furthermore we would ask this brave Juvenile Officer Frost if he remembers when he held Saturday night dances that lasted till midnight? Then I have not the least doubt that these same hoodlums, as he calls them, attended these dances and their arms were around these same girls that he says are on the streets until 12 o'clock, in a closer embrace than he has seen on the streets. We would also remind Juvenile Officer Frost that statistics show that more girls attribute their ruin to the dance hall than any other place on earth.

A FATHER

Our good natured friends, the battle scarred gentlemen of the street and water committee of the city council, had the streets sprinkled the other night at nine o'clock. The day had been hotter than blue blazes, but the dear committee had to save the water for night. Some committee; Some council!

THE WEAR OF COINS.

Chemical Action Has More to Do With It Than Has Abrasion.

In the latest report of the British mint Sir Thomas K. Rose, a well known metallurgical expert, calls attention to the effect of grease derived from the sweat of the fingers or from other sources in accelerating the wear of coins, which is usually attributed entirely to abrasion.

Sir Thomas says that the fatty acids of the grease have a corrosive action upon the metal. Copper in particular, even if present only in small quantity as an alloy for gold or silver, is converted into an oleate, stearate or other salt.

Hagen Smit of the Utrecht mint found by analysis that the dirt on a bronze coin contained 36 per cent of copper in the form of powdered compounds of the fatty acids. When the coin is handled the dirt is in part detached, and the coin undergoes a loss of weight.

Gold or silver is not readily converted into salts, but removing the copper leaves the less easily attacked metals in a spongy form that offers little resistance to abrasion.

In new coins the rapid loss of weight that occurs is doubtless caused at first by abrasion, but when the rough edges have been removed chemical action may prove to be of the first importance in the succeeding deterioration. —Youth's Companion.

FREE CITIES OF GERMANY.

Bremen, Hamburg and Lubeck and the Hanseatic League.

Bremen, one of the "free" cities of Germany, is a republic. However, that is by no means the most remarkable thing about this seaport. Its mayor holds rank similar to that of our president. It has a senate of sixteen members and a "council" or house of representatives of 150 members. When it was united with the German empire it retained all its republican principles, as also did Hamburg and Lubeck, the other two "free cities" of Germany.

When all the seans were swarming with pirates a curious league of cities in all parts of Europe sprang up. At one time there were ninety of them, and they formed a government of their own within and overlapping the geographical governments to which they belonged. They were all commercial centers and were known as the Hanseatic league, or the Hansa towns. The capital of the league was at Lubeck, and the assemblies which met there had sufficient power to coerce hostile governments and to deal drastically with the pirates that preyed upon the shipping of the league's members.

The last general assembly was held in 1600, after which Hamburg, Bremen and Lubeck formed a new Hanseatic union.—Exchange.

Simply Terrifying.

An old lady was in the same railway car as a party of soldiers.

"I found one," said the first I fell into the middle of a big heavy bush and at the same time I was stuck up on the top of a tree. I pitied out of bounds into the farmyard at the third caught by the wire at the fourth struck fast in a deep hole at the fifth found myself landed in mud at the sixth. I was lying in a heap of rough stones at the seventh got lost at the eighth and flung up at the bottom of that dirty ditch at the last hole.

"Gracious me!" cried the terrified old lady from her corner in the car, "and they told me that coal was an old man's game! I'll never let my Ed play again!"—Exchange.

Out of Abundant Caution.

There is a property owner in Pennsylvania who has endeavored to inculcate in his tenants the principle of arbitration with reference to their disputes, offering himself as arbiter.

On the occasion of the last dispute of this sort the owner before undertaking a solution put to one tenant the usual question:

"Now, William, if I consent to arbitrate will you abide by my decision?" William hesitated a moment, then said: "Well, sir, I'd like to know what the decision is first."—Case and Comment.

THE HOLLYHOCK.

A Flower That Is Intertwined With Our Colonial History.

The hollyhock gets its name from two words that indicate its origin in the Holy Land and its membership in the mallow family. But apparently it was known in India before it found its cheerful banners to the air in Wales.

Wherever its first home was, it has become thoroughly acclimated in New England. We think of it as a characteristic New England flower. It decorates our colonial history almost back to the days of Governor Bradford and Roger Williams. It is forever peering out of the pages of New England fiction and poetry. There is no flower that more completely embodies the spirit of our eighteenth century romance.

Some of the old colonial blossoms are shy and modest, but the hollyhock has the contrary of its convictions. It knows its beauty as it should, and has no mind to hide it under a bushel or beneath a hedgerow. It is the province of loveliness to display itself, not vauntingly, but with a due sense of its worth. And the hollyhock, the stateliest of our "old fashioned" flowers, aspires unabashed.

In two books of "popular quotations" there is no reference to the hollyhock, though the holly has its fair share of space. But it can afford to be thus ostracized.—Providence Journal.

FAMILIAR PHRASES.

A Few of the Many Gems We Get From Alexander Pope.

With the exception of Shakespeare, Pope is the author of more familiar phrases than any other writer of modern times. Here are a few of his gems:

"Shoot folly as she flies." "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." "Man never is but always to be blessed." "Whatever is is right." "The proper study of mankind is man." "Grows with his growth and strengthens with his strength." "Order is heaven's first law." "Worth makes the man and want of it the fellow."

"Honor and shame from no condition rise: act well your part—there all the honor lies." "An honest man's the noblest work of God." "Thou wert my guide, philosopher and friend."

"Vanity's at least a contradiction still." "Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined." "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" "A little learning is a dangerous thing." "To err is human, to forgive divine." "Beauty draws us with a single hair." "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." "Damn with faint praise." "The many headed monster."

The Blow on the Jaw.

A man struck with any degree of force upon the mental area of the jaw, although he may be in perfect physical condition, instantly collapses and falls to the ground, says a medical journal. The attitude assumed in recovery, which may be instantaneous or delayed some minutes, is most characteristic.

He squirms about, raises his head and rolls his eyes in an attempt to locate himself. He tries to get on his side and elbow; he endeavors to rise upon his hands and knees. If he regains his feet he staggers like a drunken man. The blow is practically never fatal; the heart's action is never unduly accelerated; the pulse and respiration are normal; the pupils are normal; there is no headache, no sweats, no cold extremities, no pallor—none of the ordinary signs of shock or concussion.

How to Be Happy.

There are two ways of being happy. We may either diminish our wants or augment our means. Either will do. The result is the same, and it is for each man to decide for himself and do that which happens to be the easier. If you are idle or sick or poor, however hard it may be to diminish your wants, it will be harder to augment your means. If you are active and prosperous or young or in good health it may be easier for you to augment your means than to diminish your wants. But if you are wise you will do both at the same time, young or old, rich or poor, sick or well, and if you are very wise you will do both in such a way as to augment the general happiness of society.—Benjamin Franklin.

A Celebrated Suicide.

Haydon, the celebrated historical painter and writer, at a time in his life when he was overcome by debt, disappointment and ingratitude, laid down the brush with which he was at work upon his last great effort, "Alfred and the Trial by Jury," wrote with a steady hand, "Stretch me no longer upon this rough world," and then was a pistol shot put an end to his unhappy existence.

Dressing the Pillow.

A little child, not three years old, was sleeping, and his mother carried him to his crib, but the pillowslip had been removed by the maid for the laundry, and the child, looking up at his mother's face, said pleadingly, "Please put a shirt on my pillow."

Remembered Too Well.

Howard—Did your aunt remember you in her will? Henry—She sure did. Directed her executors to collect all the loans she had made me.—Puck.

Holding His Own.

"Stings, isn't he?" "You've said it. Why, he holds fast to everything he gets his claws on and even bolts down his dinner."

Public opinion, though often formed upon a wrong basis, yet generally has a strong underlying sense of justice.—Abraham Lincoln.

THE MONEY THEY CARRY.

Poor Men, as a Rule, Have More in Their Pockets Than Rich Men.

The next time you meet John D. Rockefeller just ask him how much money he has in his pocket. Ask him how much he has in the safe at his house or in the safe deposit box at his bank—I mean real, old fashioned banknotes and dollar bills. Let me tell you that if at this very moment you and John D. Rockefeller should swap pocketbooks you would likely get stung. Mr. Rockefeller probably has not a cent more of real money in his pocket today than you have. In a general way this applies to all peoples all over the world. In many communities the workpeople carry more money about with them than the rich.

I well remember that once, at my summer home on the coast of Massachusetts, where real money is scarce than fresh eggs, a very rich man who was visiting us asked me to cash a check for him as he was leaving for New York. On looking into his pocketbook he discovered he had only $7.13! Well, I was even worse off, having only a five dollar bill and a few pennies. Even Mrs. Babson could dig up only a few dollars, as we have everything charged and pay by check.

We were just on the point of breaking open a child's bank when a painter working about the house overheard the conversation and suggested that perhaps he could cash a check for $50! This workman had on him a roll of several hundred dollars in bills.—Roger W. Babson in Saturday Evening Post.

BAGPIPES AND BRICKS.

One Case in Which Music Did Not Do the Soothing Act.

The Adelphi buildings in the Strand, London, were built by two brothers of the family name of Adam, and from this fraternal union came the name that was given to the buildings, the Greek appellation of "Adelphi" or "the brothers."

These brothers were Scots and in the erection of the buildings desired to employ their own countrymen. So they sent to the "Land of Cakes and Brither Scots" for laborers to do the work.

The story goes that after they arrived and were set at work they proved less active and energetic than was profitable to the employers, to whom a bright idea finally came. They acted upon this idea and brought to London from the north country a number of bagpipers to encourage the toilers.

At first all went well. When the bricklayers heard "O Hone a Rie," and the "MacGregors' Gathering" they worked rapidly. Unluckily one day one of pipers under the influence of London gin "gave the snap away" by admitting that he and his fellow bagpipers had been bribed to play in quicker time.

Following this exposure of foul play the men from the north put down their tools and found employment elsewhere.—Indianapolis News.

Love Affairs of Handel.

Women greatly admired Handel, who was very handsome, but the serenity of the composer seems only to have been ruffled twice by love on his part. His first attachment was to a London girl, a member of the aristocracy. Her parents believed him beneath her in social position, but were good enough to say that if he abstained from writing any more music the question of marriage might be entertained. It was easier to abstain from their daughter than from his art, and he did so. Years after almost the same thing occurred. Handel and another beautiful pupil of his fell in love with each other, and proud parents gave him the choice between giving up his profession or their daughter. Music, "heavenly maid," was chosen.—"The Love Affairs of Some Famous Men."

A Prophecy That Failed.

The old Emperor William used to tell a story against himself which well serves to illustrate "that most gratuitous form of error, prophecy." When the emperor was only king of Prussia he saw one day among his troops an untidy looking lieutenant. "Who is that man?" he asked. "An officer," he was told, "who has just left the Danish service and joined the Prussian." "That man will never get on in the army," said the monarch, and he used to add in telling the story, "The man was Moltke, and my judgment of him gives you the measure of my insight."

Bluffs Sometimes Win.

The Chinese tell a story about a tiger that was led by a monkey to a field where a fat mule was grazing. The tiger, who had never seen a mule before, kicked his chops. But the mule looked up languidly at the monkey and said:

"Friend monkey, heretofore you have always brought me two tigers. How is it you bring me only one today?" The bluff was so excellent that the tiger made off as fast as he could go.

The Elephant.

East Indians believe that the elephant lives 300 years. Instances are on record of these huge animals having been in captivity for 130 years their ages being unknown when they were taken from the jungle in a wild state.

Nothing Exempt.

Saturday Shopping Hints for Home Shoppers

The fall season is upon us again—after a beautiful summer season in which "summer goods," especially the popular whites, didn't get even the proverbial "look in." But Oregon City merchants have made the best of the condition and the lack of summer has not daunted them. They have stocked their stores with the very latest and best in fall merchandise.

Adams Department store this week advertises new fall coats, suits and dresses for ladies and misses. The men are provided for with the latest of wearing apparel, but with the change of seasons the ladies demand maximum attention. At the Adams store will be found very pretty displays.

"Your grocery bill?" asks Larsen and Company, the popular grocers. Saving on a grocery bill is as good as a bank account. Larsen and Company offer to show you, Mrs. Housewife, just how you can save money—buy your groceries at retail or wholesale from this store.

Bannon and Company announce the arrival of fall suits and coats and have prepared a very attractive display for the inspection of the ladies who patronize their big store. Their advertisement in these columns is an invitation for you to inspect their new goods.

Huntley Bros. suggest that when the painter applies paint to your home that you see to it that he uses Sherwin-Williams paints and varnishes. The Huntley store has a very complete line of these paints. The dusty season has about passed now and house owners may be sure that Sherwin-Williams paints will withstand the ravages of the winter climate.

The real re-creation of music, vocal or instrumental, is an accomplishment of the wizard, Edison. At the Burmeister & Andersen store there is a wonderful surprise awaiting you if you have never listened to Edison's re-creation of the beauties of the human voice, or the music of any instrument. This company is agent for the Edison Diamond-Disc phonograph.

Frank Busch, the well-known furniture dealer, calls attention this week to the new "Exchange Furniture" department of his big store. In addition to this new feature of the business, Mr. Busch presents attractive merchandise in the way of tables, sewing machines, stoves and go-carts.

Miss Mabel Volkmar, who has been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Smith at Salem for the past two months, has returned to her home in this city and will resume her piano class immediately.
