

We strongly commend the work of Gilbert L. Hedges, District Attorney, and urge his reelection. He has vigorously prosecuted the keepers of the Hotel Belle and Friars Club and has been successful in his efforts to give the good citizens of Milwaukie a more decent government, and we hope voters of the entire county will assist us here in Milwaukie by voting for Gilbert L. Hedges, District Attorney.

SEEN FROM THE OPTIMIST'S TOWER

Did you ever meet a red-blooded man who, down in his gizzard, really loved the city? The Optimist picked up Robert W. Service's little poem, "I'm Scared of it All," and his blood tingled in sympathy as he read: "I watch the wan faces that flash in the street; All kinds and all classes I see. Yet never a one in the million I meet Has the smile of a comrade for me. Just faded and panting like dogs in a pack; Just tensed and intent on the goal; O God! but I'm lonesome—I wish I was back Up there in the land of the Pole."

I have slept on the silent trails under the gleaming stars of the sub-Arctic northland, miles from the haunts of men, and have never felt a thrill of loneliness. I have joined in the canoe song of the Canadian voyageurs on the deserted, waterway paths that slipped ever towards the silent shores of Hudson's bay, and had no longing for the rush and worry of the crazy town. But in the hour when I stood in the teeming heart of the great city and watched the mighty crowd surge by, and knew that not a soul of the multitude knew whether I lived or died, and cared less, I felt the most poignant pain of my lifetime—the real simon pure homesickness. Like Service I could say:

"I wish I was back on the Hunger Plateaus, And seeking the lost caribou; I wish I was up where the Coppermine flows To the kick of my little canoe. I'd like to be far on some weariful shore In the land of the Blizzard and Bear; Oh, I wish I was snug in the Arctic once more, For I know that I'm safer up there! I prowl in the canyons of dismal unrest; I cringe—I'm so weak and so small. I can't get my bearings, I'm crushed and oppressed With the vast and the waste of it all. The slave and the madman, the lust and the sweat, The fear in the faces I see; The getting, the spending, the fever, the fret— Its too bleeding cruel for me."

Ah, how many in the crowded life of the great city can say with the author I have just quoted: "Yet bring I to my work an eager joy, A lusty love of life and all things human; Still in me leaps the wonder of the boy, A pride in man, a deathless faith in woman."

It is worth more to have this than all the wisdom of foolish disillusionment that comes with the blasé knowledge of the world that dwells in the sordid hearts of so many dwellers in cities. "I feel that it's wrong, but I can't tell you why— The palace, the hovel next door; The insolent towers that sprawl to the sky, The crush and the rush and the roar. I'm trapped like a fox and I fear for my pelt; I cower in the crash and the glare; Oh, I want to be back in the avalanche belt, For I know that it's safer up there!"

It is in the city that Mammon builds his throne; that foul vice riots and festers in putrid slums; that innocence is ever in danger of the snare of the devil's fowler. The gleaming lights of the city cover many a sin, many a remorse, many a heartache. I'm with you, Service—"I'm scared of it all. Oh, afar I can hear The voice of my solitudes call! We're nothing but brute with a little veneer, And nature is best after all. There's tumult and terror abroad in the street; There's menace and doom in the air; I've got to get back to my thousand-mile beat; The trail where the cougar and the silvery-pelt meet; The snows and the camp-fire, with wolves at my feet. Good-bye for this safer up there. To be forming good habits up there; To be living on rabbits up there; In your hunger and woe, Though its sixty below, Oh, I know that it's safer up there."

What a nice sweet-smelling place the beer saloon is anyway! The brewers say that if we only allow them to make beer they will not open naughty saloons. They have no intention of doing this anyway. Besides they have hired a lot of geek lawyers to see that they can't do it, even if their good intentions get busted! Nearly all the district attorneys of the state say the passage of the brewers' bill will mean the opening of beer saloons. The brewers' ad in the Portland papers, declaring their good intentions if the law passes, is an acknowledgment that they see the same possibility in the law. Anyone who can read English can see from the wording of the amendment that it will allow the establishment of such places. The fact that the brewers are spending one million dollars in this campaign in these coast states shows that they have in view something more than the supply of the little dribbling interstate traffic there has been during 1916. The saloon business is the last intrenchment of several kinds of the dirtiest devil civilization has ever had to face, and now is the time to cast it out with its whole hellish brood, forever, by voting 315 NO to the brewers' amendment.

ment and 316 YES to the prohibition amendment.

The present political campaign reminds the reader of Pat's first day's hunting experience. He said: "The first burr I ever shot was a squirrel. The first time I hit him I missed him altogether, and the next time I struck him in the same place. Then I took a stone and dropped him from the three and he fell into the strame and was drowned, and that wuz the first burr I ever shot."

An absent minded salesman was promoted from the clothing department of a big store to the sporting goods section. A few days afterward he lost the firm one of its best customers. It came about in this way. The man bought a very expensive dog collar and paid for it. The clerk wrapped it up, then shocked the buyer into a fit by innocently asking: "Shall I put a stronger paper on it and send it, or will you wear it?" Wonderful influence habit has upon life anyway! If you don't believe it just stand beside some store counter, and see how many men's feet will feel involuntarily for a brass rod near the bottom when they lean against it.

A good many sinners can sympathize with Tommy's answer to a Sunday school examination question: It read:

"What effect did the ten commandments have upon the Children of Israel?" Tommy answered: "The ten commandments made the Children of Israel feel very miserable."

A New York divine asks the question: "Why do men not go to church?" He quotes all sorts of answers in reply, nearly all of which are lies. The church has not lost its grip. There is a larger per centage of the population of the land in the church today than ever before. Atheists of the ingersoll type have a slighter following than at any time in the world's history. But the fact of the matter is that the average man who is not living right is too big a coward candidly to face himself as he really is, and if he goes to church he is compelled to acknowledge some salutary but unpleasant truths. Who wants to know what a measly crook he is if he can delude himself into thinking that he is a mighty good fellow by refusing to face the facts candidly?

The other day the Optimist picked up a creed that appealed to him. Here it is:

I believe in a church which serves the community, spiritually, mentally, physically.

I believe in a church which lives and enjoys—not just endures—its religion.

I believe in a church with a job for every member, and every member everlastingly on the job.

I believe in a church which is the brightest and most attractive spot in the whole community.

I believe in a church which carefully conserves the spiritual welfare of its boys and girls.

I believe in the church which is not afraid to make provision for the social and recreational life of its young people, even though it may mean a little work, and some expenditure of money.

I believe in the church which transacts its business in a manner to commend itself to the business sense of the community, neither playing the "deadhead," "cheap skate" or "bazaar gambling" game.

I believe in a church which uses its pastor not as a pack horse to get it through to glory, but as a general to direct a well-planned campaign.

I believe in a church which is not a hospital for neurotics and dyspeptics, but a well organized army to conquer the community for Christ.

I believe in a church whose membership is so busy helping people that it has no time for backbiting, gossip or jealousy.—The Optimist.

Took the Hurt Out of Her Back

Physicians report more cases of kidney trouble among women than men. Mrs. Anna Byrd, Tusculum, Ala., writes: "I was down with my back so I could not stand up more than half of the time. Foley Kidney Pills took all the hurt out. They are the best kidney pills I ever took." Rheumatic pains, swollen ankles, backache, stiff joints, sore muscles, and sleep disturbing bladder ailments indicate disordered kidneys. Foley Kidney Pills act promptly.—Jones Drug Co.

Sues on Contract

Alleging that Gust Engelbrecht failed to live up to his part of a contract to deliver to the Atlantic Produce company of San Francisco 300 sacks of potatoes at $1.12 a hundred, the company brought suit against Mr. Engelbrecht in the circuit court here last week. The company asks for a judgment of $200 against Mr. Engelbrecht.

Estacada Has Roundup

The Estacada Cattleman's association, which is made up of farmers and livestock growers of the Estacada country, recently rounded up about 200 head of range cattle. The cattle have been grazing since early spring on the federal reserve in the mountains east of Garfield.

Just how Candidate William Stone plans to save $900 salary for a deputy district attorney when the deputy has not cost this county one penny is beyond the normal mind. And we would also like to have Mr. Stone tell us in such a way that we might publish it for Courier readers just how he will save the county $3000 for enforcement of the prohibition law when it has not cost the county one cent to enforce that law. Mr. Stone's school of finance is different from any yet made prominent by the light of knowledge and we feel that Courier readers would be interested in the candidate's plan.

LAW NOT EQUITABLE

Mr. Cottrell Denounces Sunday Law And Asks for its Repeal

"If the Sunday forced rest law is equitable, then it should be enforced to the letter; but if in its analysis it is found to be discriminatory or religious in character, then it is un-American and should be repealed," said H. W. Cottrell, secretary of the North Pacific Religious Liberty association, author and lecturer, in an address at Willamette hall last night.

"The Sunday blue law," said Mr. Cottrell, "prohibits the following named places of business and pleasure from opening: any store, shop, grocery, bowling alley, billiard room, or tipping house, for the purpose of labor or traffic, or any place of amusement, except theaters, drug stores, doctors' offices, undertakers, livery stable keepers, butchers and bakers."

"It is universally conceded in courts of equity that one's property cannot be wrested from him by any municipal, state or national right, without first giving him value received therefor. To illustrate: if a man owns a spring of excellent water situated on a hill above the city, and its use is desired to meet the need of the multitude and the owner refuses to sell the right for its use, the city of course proceeds to take it by the due process of law; but gives value received for that taken from him by civil force."

"It is not an invasion of the rights of a man who desires to rest on Sunday or Saturday for another man to use the day in pleasure for himself and family, or in labor for their support. Any kind of labor or pleasure that is proper to engage in on other days of the week is just as proper to do on Sunday, unless the legislation is in the interests of the day as a religious institution. And if the legislation is in the interest of the day as a religious institution, it is fundamentally wrong and un-American. Such law is not only class, but sectarian and religious as well."

"American laws are for the protection of the rights of all the people—for the protection of the weak against the strong; for the protection of the minority against the majority. Sunday legislation is in the interest of those who regard the day religiously, and against those who do not thus regard it; hence it is class legislation."

"The federal constitution says, 'Congress shall make no laws respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.' First amendment."

"Every citizen who loves his own liberty of choice to rest on Sunday or Saturday should equally respect the right of choice of other men who choose not to rest any particular day of the week."

A REPUBLICAN BOUMERANG.

Nothing so forcefully reveals the desperate situation at the Republican National Campaign headquarters as their attempt to discredit President Wilson's Mexican policy by a "Movie" picture directed by a paroled convict, whose idea of a "thrill" is a scene showing nuns being ravished and whose conception of patriotism is the President asleep at his desk.

But after all the principal is responsible for his agent. Hal Reid was only trying to earn the $25,000 appropriated by the Republican National Committee for a film, which now stinks so they don't want to get within smelling distance of it. And they excuse themselves by saying they never knew it would be so rotten. The point is this: it wasn't too rotten if they could get away with it. They were caught in the act of trying to "put it over." They were caught in the act of trying to deny responsibility for it.

Does any one believe that Hal Reid went ahead with the faded film before he had had the sacred O. K. by some one in authority at Republican Headquarters? Everett Colby's endorsement, "It's a corker," is sufficient proof of this.

That it was in execrable taste or even treasonable—what was that to this crowd which has nothing to spend but money! The whole sordid affair is a fit parallel to the Hum. Bonham and Rebellon campaign which proved such a boomerang to the parties that started it. What can you expect of a party which campaigns on abuse, vilification, slander, innuendo and lies? We agree with the Brooklyn Eagle in wondering "if there was anything in this film that was not more than suggested by Colonel Roosevelt in his many attacks upon the President's Mexican policy? He has proclaimed President Wilson responsible for the conditions that he described. Others have done the same. In view of this why should the playwright be blamed for adapting the material to his medium? Can it be that the chief of the President had to see these things on the screen before realizing how truly despicable this form of attack appears to most people?"

The exposure of the character of this sordid film should save the Evening World, prove a sharp lesson to Republican campaign leaders. "The whole affair puts a stigma upon Republican campaign methods."

This—and Five Cents!

DON'T MISS THIS. Cut out this slip, enclose five cents to Foley & Co., 2835 Sheffield Ave., Chicago, Ill., writing your name and address clearly. You will receive in return a trial package containing Foley's Honey and Tar Compound, for bronchial coughs, colds and croup; Foley Kidney Pills, for pain in sides and back, rheumatism, backache, kidney and bladder ailments; and Foley Cathartic Tablets, a wholesome and thoroughly cleansing cathartic, especially comforting to stout persons.—Jones Drug Co.

The millinery store at 709 Seventh street, formerly owned by Miss Lottie Blumh, has been purchased by Miss Alice Schumacher and Miss Alta Lin-ton of Molalla. The new owners have conducted a similar establishment at Molalla for some time and are experienced milliners. They have transferred their stock from Molalla and added it to that bought from Miss Blumh.

CATTLE RUN LIGHT

Receipts at Portland Yards are Slow. Hog Yards Have Live Session

Cattle receipts at Portland Monday were the lightest for several months, there being only 750 head received. Buyers had good orders and the market opened briskly. The run as a rule was ordinary, there being about six loads of prime cattle here; prices ruled 10 to 15 cents higher on most sales, although there were several loads of ordinary steers that went across the scales early on steady basis. Prime heavy steers sold at $7 for several loads, against $6.85 top last week; there were a number of other loads of prime steers sold from $6.50 to $6.75; good steers sold from $6 to $6.25, with poor and ordinary stuff going from $5 to $5.75. A few head of prime heifers brought $5.50, but the bulk of best cows sold at $5.25, with one load at $5.35; good cows sold from $4.75 to $5.25. Feeders sold at $6 with the bulk of good ones going from $5.25 to $5.75.

One of the most lively sessions held in the hog yards this year was staged Monday morning. There was but a moderate run offered and prime hogs were 10 to 15 cents higher over last week's close.

Sheep receipts continue very light with all classes in good demand.

Choice lambs quoted $8.50 to $8.75, best yearlings $7.50 to $7.75, with good mutton ewes at $6.

Mulino School Notes

A large crowd attended the debate and social given at the Mulino school on the evening of October 27. The question, "Resolved, that Hughes will make a better president than Wilson," was well debated, the decision being in favor of the affirmative. The proceeds from the sale of pies amounted to $13.70.

The Mulino school has an enrollment of 42 pupils. Those being neither tardy or absent during the last month are: Elizabeth Long, Mildred Maple, Mary Snodgrass, Esther Rugg, May Bellamy, Violet Manning, Viola Mallatt, Fred Ashby, Leonard Manning, Donald Haines, Lizzie Lang, Clifford Daniels, Stillman Daniels, Vincent Myers, Delbert Mallatt, Lucile Glover. The number of visitors for the last month was eight.

Risley Leaves Hospital

C. W. Risley, of Milwaukie, left the Oregon City hospital this week after a confinement of 10 days as the result of an operation performed upon his hand. The infected member is healing rapidly and Mr. Risley anticipates getting into the political campaign this week.

YOU DON'T WANT DRUGS

We realized a long time ago that the American people were learning to discriminate between drugs and medicines. We welcomed the change. It always went against our grain to sell patent cures, all about which we knew nothing. But we had to do it because of public demand and until the public met us half way. Then we secured the privilege of selling a line of real remedies, which cannot be sold by any other druggist in this community. To get these remedies we joined forces with more than 800 of the leading druggists in the United States, Canada and Great Britain, in a co-operative company, to manufacture Rexall Remedies. Below are some of them reproduced.

Let us tell you why we believe in Rexall Remedies—why an honest prescription for a particular ill is better than any old-fashioned cure-all. Ask us to show you the formula of the remedy in which you are interested. There are no secrets about Rexall Remedies.

We'll Give You a Bottle Free

—If you can ask us a question that we can't answer honestly and look you straight in the eye while we're talking. Try Rexall Remedies at our risk. If you use any Rexall Remedy and are not satisfied, come back and get your money. We'll return it without question. We're building our business for the future, and we want you to come again.

ner in the late lamented street parade look strong—like pink tea.

Another banner bore these words: "Textile workers in America are the highest paid in the world." Wouldn't that make you laugh? Here a few years ago, when our friends, Oscar Underwood et al, were engaged in passing the Underwood tariff law, we heard the most hideous moaning in the republican camp. Investigation proved the means to be fearful statements that the tariff revision downward would kill the wool market and would ruin the manufacture of textiles in this glorious land of the free and the brave. And here, less than four years later, we find the republicans themselves giving the lie to their fearful statement by telling us that textile labor in America is the highest paid in the world. How horrible, that our native land should enjoy such remarkable prosperity!

Another banner asking: "U. S. or Mexico—Which?" had just started on its gay rampage down the street when it suddenly collapsed and had to be discarded on a side street. Too weak and ashamed of itself to support itself! An issue that wasn't strong enough to stand upon its own worth—it had to collapse!

And then we followed the flock of followers down Main street to Busch's hall to hear Mrs. E. B. Hanley. Mrs. Hanley told us in a right outspoken way that no item of constructive legislation had been passed in ever so many decades that was not the work of the republican party. Of course, the constructive legislation that she could not deny to President Wilson's administration she pictured as fearfully bad. There is the child labor law. Naturally, being a constructive law, the republicans fathered it. But the Adamson eight-hour law — no good, absolutely worthless!

Goodness, but these rabidly partisan republicans are patriotic, constructive people! If they are not that, then they are funny, for they furnished so much amusement to hundreds of people on Thursday evening that the moving picture shows were nearly deserted until Mrs. Hanley started to talk.

BURK ARRESTS CHILDREN

Special Officer Says Tots Interfere With Parade of His Party

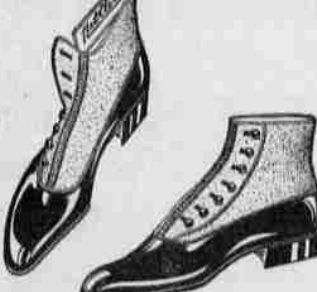

Because he was of the opinion that these little boys, carrying a picture of Woodrow Wilson, had no right on Main street last Thursday evening while the republican rally was being held, F. C. Burk, a special officer appointed to serve for the evening, arrested the little fellows long enough to destroy their banner and reprimand them for their actions.

The little fellows were marching along the street, cheering occasionally for the president, when they were halted by the officer, their banner torn up and orders given to them to cease their interest in President Wilson while the republican rally was in progress. A number of citizens threatened action against Mr. Burk because of his unwarranted interference. Those who saw his action say that the little boys were orderly and not even interfering with the street parade. Burk is an ardent supporter of Candidate Hughes.
