

TRAINING LITTLE CHILDREN

Every Mother Can Learn to Tell a Story—She Can Also Play Games With Her Children and Supply Them With Good Music and Books

Suggestions by mothers who have been kindergartners. Issued by the United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., and the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West Fortieth Street, New York.

By Mrs. Ona B. Kritter

Kindergarten methods, whether begun by the mother in her own home, as should be the case in the home of the right kind, or by the trained teacher in school, are of inestimable value to the child, for character building is always made their principal aim and object.

Perhaps mothers may not have been trained in kindergarten methods, but at least they can learn how to tell a story. Anyone can read a story but telling one is much more effective and much more enjoyable to the child. Every mother should learn how to tell a story. Use your own words and choose simple and forceful ones. A bare plot is interesting to the tiny child, but many details should be supplied for the older boy and girl; they love them. Use direct discourse when possible. Be enthusiastic. Be dramatic. After the story is finished, talk it over freely with the children. Choose some stories which teach kindness to animals and some which give training in morals or good habits, but never point the moral. Let the story bear its own message.

A taste for the best literature is often formed in early childhood through a wise choice of stories. This is also true of music. The songs and music used in the kindergarten are always carefully selected by the kindergartner, and should be just as carefully selected for the home by mothers. Allow your children to hear only the best. There is plenty of good, simple music now published simple enough for children to enjoy and good enough to lead into a love of true music.

Besides story-telling and music, there are also pictures. Those which interest the child must show action and movement. Pictures are helpful because they develop the imagination and arouse creative faculties. Care should be taken as to the subject matter of the pictures. They are teaching tools.

Childhood is the time of "make-believe and let's pretend" and play means more than anything else to a child. If only more mothers would learn this!

Some mothers can, in a degree, give the training that is necessary for little children. But how much better it is, if possible, to have the help of a trained kindergarten teacher. She has the proper materials to work with. Then, too, in a kindergarten the child mingles with other children of his own age. These experiences with his equals are of special benefit to him. A child will not learn many needed lessons by merely being told to, but he soon learns them through contact with others, who have the same needs and wants as himself.

Mme. Montessori says, "In every child, I see a possible Christ." No person, besides a mother, realizes this as much as the good kindergartner.

ARTILLERY BRANCH APPEALS TO MEN IN THE U. S. SERVICE

Of 1634 soldiers whose qualifications were examined soon after they were inducted, three-fourths of the number expressed as their preference of branch of service the artillery. And now it is open to those not yet in the army; registered and classified men may volunteer and be inducted for heavy artillery organization for overseas service.

These regiments of the powerful guns—howitzers, big cannon, anti-aircraft, railway artillery—are moving in greater numbers and more swiftly into the fighting in France. Men apt, qualified, and "game" for this branch that is Big in every sense of the word, are needed now; men who want to see real action, and give the best that is in them will jump at this chance that is offered. For opportunities are limited to be enlisted specialists, non-commissioned officers, specialized soldiers, ammunition men and firers of high explosive shells.

Officers' training camps, too, are within the reach of the man of spirit, ambition, and the lively fighting qualities, for schooling preliminary to the studies in the camp is given to all who want it and thus many are equipped to begin the course for commissions.

If you are registered and classified write a letter to the Commanding Officer, Coast Defenses of the Columbia, Fort Stevens, Oregon, giving your name; order and registration number; class (number and letter); present address; number and address of local board; and whether qualified for general or limited service. The rest of the induction will be taken care of.

LOOKOUT MAN DISCOVERS MIDNIGHT FIRE IN FOREST

A forest fire that burned over five acres and threatened the destruction of a logging engine and cables worth several thousand dollars, besides valuable timber in the Wind River valley, Washington, was discovered, reported, and put under control between the hours of midnight and four o'clock in the morning, according to a detailed report just received by Forest Supervisor Brundage, of the Columbia National Forest.

This fire, which occurred October 1, started from a donkey engine belonging to the Wind River Lumber company, some time after seven o'clock, when the crew left it for the night. The fire was discovered at midnight, from Observation Peak, Columbia National Forest, by Lookoutman X. Wade, when he made his nightly observation. Because of his familiarity with the region he knew the fire was either in the Wind River Logging Works or at Government Mineral Springs, the two places being about a half-mile apart. Unable to arouse anyone near the fire by telephone, Wade called up Ranger Colter at Spirit Lake, who by use of the special loud-sounding "howler" signalling set was able to arouse Ranger Cline, at Hemlock ranger station, in the Wind River valley. He in turn called up the logging camp and told the foreman of the fire five miles from camp. The foreman called out the crew, who hastened to the fire, a few by automobile and the rest by logging train. So successful were the thirty fire-fighters that when Superintendent Parker arrived on the scene from Stevenson, seventeen miles away, at four o'clock in the morning he found the fire under control and the donkey engine, cable and the surrounding timber safe.

Two Runaway Boys Are Found Near Estacada
Last Saturday while H. N. Everhart and Bob Elkins, both of Molalla, were hunting lost sheep in the wilds 10 miles from Estacada, they met Lew Hubbard, also of Molalla, who had two runaway boys from Portland with him. The lads had become lost in the hills, and told the men that they had left Portland Friday morning and were looking for work. Everhart and Elkins brought the boys to Oregon City, where they gave their names to Sheriff Wilson as Paul Spangler, aged 17 and Howard Fisher, aged 15. They live at 47th and 60th avenue, Portland. The Spangler boy claimed that the reason he left home was that he had no mother, and that his father compelled him to take care of the children. He told Sheriff Wilson that he was "dread of being a nurse" and didn't want to go back home. The Fisher lad had no particular reason for leaving his home and claimed that he was willing to go back.

When searched by the sheriff, no money was found on the boys, and the only articles were a bunch of keys and a shoemaker's awl and a spool of thread. Fisher said that they had 50c when they started, but that he lost the money when he rolled down a steep bank. Sheriff Wilson held the lads until they arrived in Oregon City to take charge of them.

NEED TO SAVE FOOD IS GREATER THAN EVER NOW

"The military situation forms no adequate reason for relaxation of conservation," says Herbert Hoover, federal food administrator. "On the contrary, Europe developments make emphasis upon this conservation effort particularly important, because evacuation of occupied territory imposes on us the responsibility for additional civilian population."

In other words the people in the territory taken from the Germans must be fed. Further demands for food will come whenever fighting ceases. The world food supply must be carefully administered until the next harvest to prevent actual famine in parts of Europe. Saving of all food in America must therefore be intensified to supply bread and meat to hungry Europe.

BUSINESS IS SLOW IN CLERK'S OFFICE TUESDAY

Outside of one marriage license issued Tuesday in the county clerk's office, not a paper was filed with the clerk or any other business transacted in the office.
