

LABOR'S TROUBLE HAS NEW TWIST

mental in bringing on and continuing the strike."

S. A. Richards, president of the Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers' unions, and prominent in strike activity, was arrested Saturday by Henry Cooke, acting chief of police. Richards is charged with using obscene language while a member of the picket line on the suspension bridge. Union men say that they had "framed up" Richards' part in the affair so that he would be arrested as a test of the city's power to interfere with their picket line. Victor Conrroe, who is said to have been walking on Main street with a woman when Richards burst into unseemly talk, made the complaint against the union official. Richards will have a hearing before Recorder Loder on Saturday.

A warrant charging assault was issued for the arrest of Sam Finucane Monday on complaint of Matthew Rissberger, a 17-year-old boy employed by the Crown-Willamette Paper company. Rissberger charges that Finucane, who is a striker, questioned him about his work at the mills and struck him. The lad exhibits a badly discolored eye as a verification of his statement. Finucane was a winder-man on No. 6 machine and had thought that Rissberger had taken his job, whereas the boy is two grades below Finucane's former position. Rissberger had been employed in the mill since he left school here last spring and did not go out with the strikers. Finucane pleaded not guilty before Recorder Loder and will be tried within a few days.

HAPPY ESKIMOS IN NORTH-LAND HOME

dirty and ill-smelling, but robust and vulgarly healthy.

And there were children galore. Nearly every married woman has a half dozen in tow and one on her back, held in position with her parka.

I attended a Catholic service one Sunday morning and it was really amusing to see the Eskimo women, nearly every one with a papoose on her back. They had to sit forward in their seats that the babies be not squeezed.

The men sat on one side of the church and the women on the other. An Italian priest had charge of the mission. The morning services are in English and the evening in the Eskimo dialect, but many of the natives attend both services.

The native dialect—I wish I could make words sound it. It is a guttural articulation, made by the tongue and the roof of the mouth. I don't know a better illustration than a boy eating soup, sucking it in from the point of the spoon. It does not appear to be a dialect, but rather some disagreeable mouth noises. However, it answers their purposes splendidly.

But the native ingenuity of these people is remarkable. Their kayaks—walrus skin canoes—are wonders of workmanship. I examined several on the shore, and a native who could speak a little English, showed me one he had just finished. The lacing together of many skins over a skeleton frame work is a task a white man could not accomplish. It takes infinite patience and time to make one of these canoes, but time and patience are the most abundant things with the Eskimos.

For a long time I watched a squaw at the making of a wooden dish. It was like our chopping bowls. We could buy one for a dollar, but this squaw worked days, no doubt weeks, on it.

The original wood was a part of a drift wood stump. She was making of it a food container and the only tools she had was a piece of band iron which she used as a scraper. The rest of the work was done by fire. She would take coals from a fire, put them on the wood, move them from place to place, fan them and add bits of fuel to them. When she had charred all over the hollow she would rake out the fire and scrape the charred surface with the piece of iron.

This work was done on the ground, the squaw sitting on a board and bending over her dish. If she lived long enough she would fashion a handsome dish from the stump root.

I watched her for a long time and endeavored to break into conversation, but she utterly ignored my presence, but not even look up at me, and I concluded there was a slim chance for a summer flirtation with this dame.

In the center of the village was a mound-shaped pile of logs, rock and earth. I wondered what it was. I thought at first it was an ice house but there was not an entrance or a window in it. Days later I found it was a sort of ceremonial house.

Adjoining it was a board shack and on a tour of inspection early one morning I found the door of this place open. There was not a single thing in the building, but in the middle of the dirt floor was a piece of metal roofing. I lifted this and found a hole. I crawled into it and found the entrance to a tunnel which led to the blind building adjoining. I followed it and it opened into the covered room, but it was so dark and the ventilation so checked that I hurried out. A few nights later there were strange doings in that hidden room. An upriver Indian told me naked men and women were dancing there. Smoke was coming out of the mound, but there were no lights.

The Eskimos are wonderful sailors and it is seldom one is lost at sea. They have many small sail boats form which they catch dog salmon which they sell to the trading stores. The dried fish are sold for feed for dogs teams in winter.

The natives have a sort of animal instinct that a white man cannot understand. They can read the elements and discern danger where a white man would never think it existed. If you wanted to take a boat trip, the native would gladly take you for a small compensation, but he will look at the ocean and up at the clouds and shake his head, and when he has shaken, money can't change his mind. He is a student of nature and he sees or smells a storm that the white man can't see nor smell.

They are wonderful carvers of ivory, these natives. In the long ago the tusks of the walrus and the now extinct mastodon, were the iron and steel of these savages, and from them all kinds of weapons and household implements were made.

I was reliably told that up to a dozen or more years ago the old and feeble Eskimos were killed, and some of the coast white men told me that the custom yet prevails to a certain extent. When a man or woman become old and helpless it was the rule for some member of the family to arrange a hanging match, and the old people willingly helped to execute themselves. The custom had its advantages. It made it unnecessary to maintain homes for the feeble-minded and poor houses for the feeble-bodied.

Like the Indians, the Eskimos have had their medicine men. In the older days they went through all kinds of contortions to cure the sick. But the doctors played the game as safely in those days as they do now. If the patient died he was pronounced as bewitched, and of course, incurable. If he lived the medicine man was heap big doctor.

The native religion of the Eskimo is devil worship. They don't really love his satanic majesty, but they want to stand in, through fear, so they render sacrifice to him and make him many gifts. The good spirits don't need any attention. The game is to stand off the evil ones.

Some of the skin parkas (coats) of the natives are beautiful, especially those made from the skins of the reindeer and the bear. They are always worn, winter or summer.

The Eskimos are the best natured race of people I ever met. They are always smiling and happy. They always look a stranger in the face and if there is any encouragement, they will speak and smile. They are hard workers at fishing or hunting and will endure great hardships on the dog trails, but they do not take to regular routine work.

Most any man you meet has some ivory carving specimens in his pocket, and many of them are wonders of patience and workmanship. The squaws weave baskets, but they are not the equal of those made by the Indians of the states.

Next week I will write you of the life of the prospector or miner, give you the routine, the hardships and the many little and most interesting details that too many writers overlook or do not know.

THE BEST TEST

Is the Test of Time

Years ago this Oregon City resident told of good results from using Doan's Kidney Pills. Now F. H. Busch, hardware and furniture dealer, of 11 Eleventh street, confirms the former statement—says there has been no return of the trouble. Can Oregon City people ask for more convincing testimony?

"I suffered from an acute attack of kidney and bladder trouble and got no relief until I used Doan's Kidney Pills," says Mr. Busch. "They stopped the trouble after I had taken two boxes and I have no sign of it now." (Statement given March, 1910.)

A Lasting Cure

On April 17, 1916 Mr. Busch added: "I have been permanently cured of kidney trouble. Doan's Kidney Pills are entitled to all the credit."

Price 60c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Busch has twice publicly recommended. Foster-McLburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

New Limb Support

Tests of a new limb support which have been made in a hospital in this country have proved so satisfactory that a Red Cross unit will take one of the devices to France, together with specifications for making others if desired. As illustrated and described in the December Popular Mechanics magazine, it consists of a hammocklike sling suspended from a steel arm that can be attached either to a bed or a wheel chair. Its special feature is the freedom of movement that it affords the patient. By means of a rope and pulleys the sling can be raised or lowered, while the supporting arm permits it to swing from side to side.
