VAMPIRE OF THE OCEAN.

"Ironing" the Devilfish Is a Mode of Flirting With Death.

"Ironing" the devilfish, the largest of all the rays and one of the largest creatures of the sea, means flirting with death. The devilfish is also known as the ocean vampire. Its scientific name is Manta vampyrus, and all these names tell something of its habits. It gets its name devilfish from the fact that projecting from either side of the head is a hornlike appendage which in reality is a detached part of the pectoral fin or wing. The horns, sometimes three feet long and freely movable, are used to bring food to its mouth.

These fins have been known to circle above the bow of a boat, lifting the vessel out of the water and deluging the occupants of the boat with gallons of water. When they flop back to the surface they make a noise that can be heard far off. Exciting? Dangerous? The sport is both. The only thing that saves devilfish hunters at a time like this is preparedness. Every man must be at his station, all must obey the will of the harpooner, and if a bit of luck is thrown in the manta is killed.

The devilfish gets its name of manta, meaning blanket, from the pearl divers of the Caribbean sea, who are of the belief that it devours people after enveloping them in its enormous wings.

The fish has prodigious strength and has been known to tow a hundred ton vessel far out to sea. An authenticated story is told of a manta that towed eight boats, lashed together, for hours until finally the crews were compelled to cut the rope and let the devilfish escape.

Its vitality is wonderful. There are records of specimens escaping after having been harpooned, lanced and shot many times with rifles of heavy caliber. It fights even after the brain and heart have been pierced. Death comes only when the spinal cord, back of the brain, is severed.—New York Sun.

TRAVEL IN THE AIR.

The Safety That Goes With Transportation by Aeroplane.

It is a new idea that the aeroplane is a safe means of transportation in safe hands, yet it is an idea that we must firmly get into the popular mind. The average citizen is still frightened at the prospect of leaving the ground and having no support except the air itself. Yet at the speed which we expect an aeroplane to maintain—seventy or eighty miles an hour—there is no means of transportation that is so safe.

The obstructions that cause accidents with trains and automobiles do not exist for flying craft. A locomotive has to follow a definite track, which may cause a frightful calamity. The aeroplane is not so circumscribed. Its tracks are wherever it wishes to go. There are no obstructions in the air—unless we regard "air pockets" as such—no bridges to cross, no mountains to penetrate, no signals to run by and no switches to be misplaced.

Or compare this new craft with the rough road of the automobile. The slightest mistake or even inattention on the part of the driver, going, say, forty or fifty miles an hour, may hurl the machine over a precipice or overturn it on an embankment. But such a lapse on the part of an aviator has no such deplorable results. There are no precipices to fall from and no obstructions to collide with.

The aeroplane is even safer than some forms of water travel. The motorboat, going at a speed of forty miles an hour or even slower, is a more risky form of transportation than an aeroplane. If such a boat strikes even a small obstruction, such as a floating plank, its side is punctured and it sinks in a few seconds. But there are no such dangers in the air.—Orville Wright in Harper's.

Marines.

Marines—soldiers serving on shipboard—date back to the year 1664, when an order in council, dated Oct. 16, authorized 1,200 soldiers to be raised and formed into a regiment. More regiments were later on formed, and in the latter years of the French wars they numbered 32,000. The marines are today a feature of every navy, and in most countries officers of the marines are equal in rank with those in the army and navy.—London Chronicle.

Slaves of the Gown.

Some women live in a state of perpetual preparation of wardrobe. They never seem to acquire one in any approach to completion, and they are always in the act of either planning or of obtaining some separate portion of one in such a way that it would seem as if they lived to and for no other end or purpose. The materials of which their gowns are made must be of the nature of Penelope's web.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Womanly Retort.

"Women are terribly inconsistent," protested Mr. Kwibbles.

"John," replied his wife, "you know the poet says, 'Consistency's a jewel.' And you told me yourself that much jewelry is not good form."—Washington Star.

The First Question.

"Opportunity is at your door. Wants you to go with him."

"Has he a car?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

MARINE CORPS LIEUTENANT GALLANT AND COURAGEOUS

That our own American fighters have the "do-all-dare-all" gallantry of their allies in Europe is shown by a recent report commending First Lieutenant Ernest C. Williams of the United States Marine Corps who has just been presented with the Congressional Medal of Honor for "extraordinary heroism in the face of the enemy at Don Francisco de Marcoris, Dominican Republic." As the U. S. Marines expect to be the first to fight in France, the incident bears unusual interest.

Lieutenant Williams, with twelve U. S. Marines under his command, charged the stronghold, Fortaleza, in the face of fire from about forty rifles, hurling himself against the doors as they were about to close and forced his way inside, followed by his men. Eight of the twelve men were wounded but no one was seriously injured. They captured the fort without assistance from other units.

The Commandant of the Marine Corps, in forwarding his report, said: "It appears that by his conspicuous gallantry, initiative and excellent judgment, he solved the problem which might have proved a serious one had the enemy been given time to organize and consolidate, and that Lieutenant Williams in entering and seizing the Fortaleza by its only entrance was most gallant and courageous."
