ROAD BILL MASTER STROKE

Leading Farmer Tells What He Thinks of $6,000,000 Bond Issue

A leading farmer said recently, "The Oregon legislature of 1917 has made a master stroke by passing the Bond bill." As he had previously been against bonds of whatever nature, the writer was naturally surprised and asked what had changed his opinion. He said, "Evolution changes everything," and then proceeded to show me that the present method of building roads from crushed rock was behind the times as much as his original opinion of bonds had been. He gave many strong reasons—the best of which were those of supply and demand. Potatoes are now in great demand, the supply is small, prices high. Some of his neighbors who had been the hardest to see the light regarding good roads were now able to take loaded wagons to market in the winter and deliver their potatoes, while under the old regime many of them could not have taken advantage of such conditions. The same people either now own automobiles, or else have ordered for spring delivery, and with his experience as a road master, he knew that the roads could not stand the heavy demands upon them. Each year more automobiles, until now a crushed rock road built in May is a thing of the past by the following spring.

Then how to get the hard surface roads and do away with the present economic waste. He knows of no way to get roads of the right kind and get them all at once to avoid spending good money after had except to bond the state and, considering that this can be done as outlined by the legislature of 1917 and without any extra cost to the taxpayer and at low interest rates, he is heartily in favor of the plan.

His work as road supervisor after the hard surface main road is completed will then be directed alone to the building of laterals throughout the farming districts, which laterals cannot now be built except by special district tax.

This is a fact—a vote for road bonds will insure the rural districts of more roads than heretofore, as the money now spent on the main traveled highways can then be diverted to the balance of the county roads.

Clatsop County Man Held
Thomas Cully, wanted by Sheriff Burns, of Clatsop county, was arrested Friday by Constable D. E. Frost and will be returned to his home county when he is wanted to answer to a charge of non-support. He was arrested six miles east of Barlow in this county, where he was employed as a wood cutter. Cully was released under bond pending a call for his appearance.

THE COST OF HIGH LIVING

President Sproule Traces it to Changes in Standard of Living

That the high cost of living cannot be traced to any defects in the transportation systems of this country but, instead, is due to changes in the standard of living was declared by William Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific company, who has recently returned from the east. "The high cost of food is accounted for by the law of supply and demand," said Mr. Sproule. "The United States has for a long time produced more food supplies of nearly all kinds than the people of the United States consumed. The production in excess of the home consumption has been marketed abroad and our production has become part of the common stock of food supplies for countries across the sea. Now these countries are mostly at war, an important part of their population becoming consumers instead of producers as they are in peaceful times."

"The demand of these countries from us has risen far in excess of their needs under normal conditions, this resulting in a contest between our own people and the people of foreign countries as to the price to be paid for the needed supplies. The United States is a part of a family of nations. We cannot live apart unto ourselves even if we wish to do so."

"The very prosperity this country is enjoying in general has its penalties. We are exporting food as well as munitions, and in exchange for them we are getting gold. We cannot eat gold. But we can increase production, and the problem of the high cost of living can be solved only by increasing the area of production or increasing the production from existing available areas through better methods, or by both."

"The cost of living will be excessive as long as we are all eating our fill of eggs, broiled chicken, roast veal, lamb chops and sirloin steak. The excessive use of eggs cuts down the supply of chicken. The excessive use of young chicken for broilers cuts down the available supply of other food from the grown fowl. Veal means the slaughter of the young animal, instead of allowing it to grow to maturity and furnish us the normal quantity of food it would afford us. It is the same with lamb. It is notorious that the butchers, wholesale and retail, seek the choice cuts for household consumption and market the rest with difficulty. We need to learn the art of living within our means. This is easy for those who have sufficient means and I realize this, yet it is a thing that has to be done no matter who says it and whether we like it or not."

Y. P. I. Plans for Funds

Those interested in the proposed young people's institute, planned for Oregon City by the leaders in several of the churches, met at the Commercial club Sunday afternoon to plan ways and means to raise money for the construction of the club building. John W. Loder presided at the meeting, and several pastors spoke. The Rev. J. W. MacCallum outlined a plan to organize teams to work against one another in securing funds. This idea will probably be worked out at a meeting of those interested on March 19.

THE FASHIONS

It has been a matter of conjecture whether coat suits would return to favor with the spring, or whether the long coats by which women have stood firm and steadfast all through the winter would continue to satisfy their needs in spring.

One would naturally conclude that a coat suit in spring would be welcomed by most women after the heavy, long coats of winter. But the question is still to be settled. In all probability there will be as many coat suits as separate coats worn when spring comes. Some very jaunty models are being shown now, and many of them have coats in Norfolk or semi-Norfolk effects with plain or pleated skirts.

The dressier suits are made of silk and satin with touches of embroidery in the same or some contrasting color. The coats are generally midway between the hips and knees in length.

For sports wear there is no doubt that hip-length coats with contrasting skirts will be very smart, and there will be more interest in sports clothes this spring and summer than in any other styles, if one may judge from the present demand for them. Plaid skirts with coats of a solid color having the collars and cuffs trimmed with the plaid are considered exceedingly chic. The striped and checked materials are employed in the same way with coats of one color.

Besides the Norfolk coats, the loose, straight-hanging box coat is one of the models that promises to be very much favored. Some of these are quite short. They are very stunning made up in velvet and worn with white serge skirts. Dark blue or old-rose velvet, with large white pearl buttons for contrast, is used for these coats.

Not strictly Norfolk, but resembling this style in many points, is the smart model illustrated in the sketch. It is of orange-colored wool jersey and accompanies a skirt of black-and-orange check, making an exceptionally smart costume. The coat is twice belted, part of the lower belt forming straps at the top of the large patch pockets. The belts extend around the sides only and leave a panel effect at the back, which is pleated like the front.

To Freshen the Winter Dress

There are many people who wish to freshen up their winter clothes, before getting their spring things, for it is still some time before the weather will allow us to be comfortable in spring clothes. Only those who have been able to replenish their wardrobes very frequently throughout the winter will not feel the necessity of adding new touches to their clothes.

There are new sets of vests and collars and separate cuffs to match, or matching collars and cuffs which will do much toward making a change in a dress of which you may have tired. These collars and cuffs are of white shantung silk trimmed at the edges with bands of plain colored silk or the dotted or figured silks. The band

Girdles also offer another possibility for freshening dresses. The girdle is an important feature of the dress at present, and there are many charming styles, varying from the very narrow apron-string girdle hanging with long, lose ends, to the wide girdle, which is arranged artistically in a soft, crushed effect. Wide ribbon girdles are very often seen.

The use of ribbon as a dress trimming is also quite a novelty. It is used to finish the new collarless necks and sleeves, and also trims the skirts of afternoon and evening dresses. On separate waists, too, ribbon is often introduced as a trimming detail.

Puffed and Cuffed Frocks
To vary the monotony of the perfectly straight-up-and-down dress, there are several new models, of which one is shown in the sketch. The waist is cut in sections, permitting the use of two materials. The skirt shows the new puffed effect at the lower edge, with the draped panels confined to the sides only. For the attractive silks, which may be had in plain and figured effects to match in color, this design is unusually effective.

Cuffs on skirts and on the lower edges of the slip-on blouses which accompany them, are noticed in a good many dresses. The cuffs may be deep or narrow and are finished with machine stitching, giving the effect of the hems having been placed on the right instead of the wrong side of the dress. A pleated, up-standing frill about half an inch deep is sometimes used as a finish to the cuffs. This, of itself, provides sufficient trimming in some models.

Threatened Her Life

Charlotte B. Moore says that her husband, W. H. Moore, threatened her life and forced her from their home. The charges are a basis for the divorce proceedings brought in Judge J. U. Campbell's court Friday. They were married at Tacoma, Wash., on August 31, 1912, and have not lived together since 1914, the complaint says.

ROAD BOND CAMPAIGN

People Must Realize that Issue is One for State—Not Portland

To C. C. Chapman of the Oregon Voter the Courier is indebted for the following exposition of the principle behind the proposal to bond Oregon for $6,000,000 for the construction of better highways:

A canvass of every county in Oregon by the editor of the Voter reveals that the $6,000,000 road bonding act will be adopted by the people June 4, provided:

(1) Its provisions are clearly understood, and

(2) It is found to be free from Portland and paving contractor control.

To make its provisions clear is a task already undertaken in every county. The members of the legislature who returned to their homes, the press and the local leaders who are active in road development have been discussing the bill with their home people. This discussion has already transformed much opposition into active support for the measure.

Yet the ghost of paving control and Portland manipulation will not lay. The people of Oregon will not adopt a road program if they are convinced it involves a paving grab. Neither will they endorse over any project to build highways for the convenience of Portland autists.

The country communities are suspicious of road programs that emanate from Portland. Whether they have grounds for their suspicions is besides the point—they have the suspicions. These suspicions cannot be dispelled either by Portland or the paving contractors. Protests from Portland's most reputable and sincere citizens will have no appreciable effect on the outcome.

To vote for this bond issue, the people of the state must know of their own knowledge that the program is Oregon's program, not Portland's; and that control of highway expenditures will be dominated by the state and not by paving contractors.

Once this conviction is firm in their minds, they will vote the bonds.

The road boosters of Portland, irrespective of how enthusiastic, sincere and well-meaning they are, will hurt the prospects of the bond issue if they attempt to put on a state campaign.

If there is any state campaign, or campaign headquarters, it must be financed and managed under the control of the outside counties. No contributions from paving companies must be permitted. The officers must be chosen by the state and not by Portland. The whole movement must truly, genuinely originate out in the state, and serve the different counties and communities in so far as they demand service in the form of such pamphlets and statistical matter as they know they need in their local campaigns.

Each county and community is well able to handle its own local campaign, with such assistance as the local people know they need in the form of accurate, printed information. The people in each section are able to recognize the benefits that will come to their own localities, and they will work for this bond issue because they believe it will benefit their home country. They will not work for the bond issue if they are appealed to by Portland, for they will suspect that Portland's selfish interest is behind such appeals.

So far as Portland is concerned, none need have apprehension as to the outcome. The city will vote for the road bonds by a heavy majority.

Also, Portland will respond readily to all outside appeals for cooperation and assistance, should such appeals be made. But until such appeals are made, it would be well for Portland to keep hands off, confident that the people of the state will know a good thing when they get a square look at it, and will work to secure it if they believe it is honest and will benefit them.
