OREGON IS PAINTED as a state in which business is on the toboggan to bankruptcy, in which thousands are out of work and all lines of trade are suffering because of prohibition. "Business conditions in Portland are terrible," said E. Hoch, of Blumauer & Hoch, wholesale liquor dealers formerly located in Portland, to a San Diego paper recently. "Stores which formerly rented for $425 and $450 a month now bring $75 a month, with landlords jumping at the chance to rent them at that figure. Hundreds of stores are vacant. The prohibition law has thrown about 4000 men out of employment, making, with those dependent upon them, probably 20,000 people affected. Most of these people have left Portland, and I believe that, at a conservative estimate, the population of the city has shrunk 30,000 or 40,000 in less than five months."

"Despite the strict law, imports of liquor are greater than at any other time during the last decade or two. The law allows one person in a family to purchase by mail order, not more than two dozen bottles of beer, or two quarts of whisky, or two quarts of wine every 28 days. Bootlegging is rampant, and although the authorities are rigidly prosecuting the offenders, always with a jail sentence, it is on the increase."

"Because the sale of liquor by cafes and restaurants is forbidden, the Portland hotel, one of the finest in the city, has gone into receiver's hands, and the Multnomah hotel, a beautiful, metropolitan hostelry opened about a year ago, has closed its doors. Practically all the cafes refuse to keep open at night, as there is no business."

It is easy to pick out wholesale lies from this interview with the booze dealer. Hundreds of stores in Portland are NOT vacant. There has been a slight reduction in rent, according to the Morning Oregonian, but former locations for saloons are now put to other and better uses. His statements as to the alleged shrinking of Portland's population, of the increase in the use of liquor and of bootlegging cannot be backed up with substantial proof. The Portland hotel is not bankrupt, and several new and well fitted restaurants have been opened up since the first of the year.

It is easy to infer from his printed statements that E. Hoch is, in the language of the streets, a "sore head." The state in which he has made a fortune decides by a majority of 35,000 votes to try prohibition. He is forced to quit peddling booze or leave the state. He leaves and is now busily poisoning the minds of southern Californians in regard to this state.

Oregon has been in the dry column five months. So pleased are a majority with the working of the law and the general change that comes with its enforcement that if the issue were put before the voters again, the majority for prohibition would be still greater than in November, 1914. Oregon does not want the licensed saloon, unrestricted traffic in liquor or men of the type of E. Hoch.

CUBA IS AT PEACE. Canada in embroiled in the foreign war. Things used to be different. It was Cuba that was generally engaged in a ruction. Canada and Cuba are vying with each other as to which shall have the largest share of the United States market which was turned over to foreign enterprise by the Democratic tariff law.

During the ten months ended April, 1915, Cuba nosed Canada out by a little over $5,000,000, sending us $138,500,000 worth of goods, while Canada sent us but $133,000,000. Of course, a large part of Cuba's exportation to us consists of sugar, but the present law cut the duty on that, to the sorrow of the cane and beet sugar producers of this country. During the ten months period ended April, 1916, Canada and Cuba ran a dead heat for the American market, both sending us $165,000,000 worth of goods. For Canada this was an increase of $67,000,000 over the ten months ended April, 1913, under the Republican tariff law, indicating the manner in which the Democrats hurt the farmers of this country by encouraging the importation of Canadian agricultural products. Cuba beat the 1913 record by $62,000,000.

So, for the ten months ended last April, we find these two countries, one at our northern, the other at our eastern door, passing us $330,000,000 worth of products compared with $202,000,000 during the ten months ended April, 1913, under the Republican tariff law, and one of these countries at war.

Battering at our western portal, Australia and New Zealand, China and Japan, and the British East Indies, during the ten months ended April, sent us $350,000,000 worth of goods compared with $223,000,000 for the same period in 1913, under the Republican law.

And while we have been spending millions of dollars blowing first hot and then cold on that little pepper-pot at our southern entrance, Mexico, with the help of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Underwood, during the 1916 period, sent us $79,000,000 worth of goods, compared with less than $64,000,000 for a similar ten months under the Republican regime. Evidently these countries believe that all is fair in free trade and war, but how many in the United States believe in the fairness of free trade to the American producer? We shall know in November.

OREGON CITY HAS MANY of the same perplexing problems that confront San Pedro, Cal. Both towns are located near larger cities; San Pedro close to Los Angeles and Oregon City near to Portland. The San Pedro Call, like The Oregon City Enterprise, sees local trade lured to the larger stores of the big cities through the advertising of the metropolitan dailies which are circulated in the smaller towns. What the Call says is applicable here:

SHOULD you have business to transact in some distant place and it is not convenient to go there to attend to it, come and see us about the matter, we can probably attend to it for you at slight or no cost and in attending to it will properly safeguard your interests.

"The problem of keeping trade at home is one that every merchant has to face and no matter how much better bargains he may offer than those of the city stores the problem is often a discouraging one. But how many cities and towns that have been successful in keeping trade at home are those where the circulation of the city papers are relatively small?"

"Wherever you find the city paper with the largest circulation there you will find the smallest proportion of home trading for the up-to-date advertising prepared by experts is bound to pull business out of town."

"And in these towns you will always find the home merchants are not heavy advertisers. Few people understand the relation between city circulation and home advertising. Yet it is simple enough if you look into the problem."

"In Long Beach, Pasadena and other towns close to Los Angeles where the advertising of the home merchants enables the publishers to get out eight to 16 page papers every day filled with a large volume of telegraph matter the people do not find the Los Angeles papers filled with department store advertising a necessity."

"The merchants of these towns therefore kill two birds with one stone. They not only get the direct results of their advertising but by their patronage they enable the publishers to print papers that fill the field so completely there is less need for outside papers."

"If the Daily Pilot was a 16 page paper it probably would have but very little larger circulation but the Los Angeles papers would have less in San Pedro. In proportion to population it already has as large, if not larger, circulation than the larger papers in surrounding towns. People will take their home paper for the home news, no matter how many other papers they take."

"But if the merchants of San Pedro were advertising as heavily as the merchants of surrounding towns it would enable the Daily Pilot to print a volume of telegraphic and miscellaneous matter that would make the Los Angeles papers unnecessary in the majority of homes. The average citizen who now takes at least one Los Angeles paper besides his home paper would find the home paper alone sufficient."

"Solving the trade-at-home problem is a question that is entirely up to the merchants. The publisher is always ready to do his part. The average local paper prints just as good a paper and just as large a paper as the 'strangers' of the merchants will permit. If a town has small papers it is because the merchants are making but feeble effort to keep trade at home."

"If a town has strong papers well filled with general matter the citizens of that town find the outside papers necessary. Most of the towns of southern California as large as San Pedro have daily papers of from eight to 16 pages in size and the merchants are spending from four to eight times as much for advertising as are the merchants of San Pedro."

A FEW COMMENTS on the most important plans in the platform of the two parties will not come amiss at this time.

In regard to Mexico, the Republican platform pledges its aid in restoring order and promises to our citizens on or near the border adequate and absolute protection of their lives, liberty and property. The Democratic platform excuses the occupation by an armed force of a portion of Mexican territory, on the ground of want of stable, responsible government, although Wilson has recognized the Carranza government as a responsible one. It declares that the army must remain there until a repetition of bandit incursions into United States territory is improbable. The idea of punishing the perpetrators of the Columbus outrage has been given up.

In regard to foreign relations, the Republican platform declares: "We must perform all our duties and insist upon all our rights as neutrals without fear and without favor." The Democratic platform believes that it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations in any feasible association that will maintain inviolate the complete security of the highway of the seas. But in two years they have done little or nothing in that direction, except to write "notes."

The Republican platform calls on all Americans, whether naturalized or native born, to be true to the spirit of America. The Democratic platform condemns partisanship, and then attempts to make "Americanism" a partisan issue.

The Republican platform declares we must have a strong navy, so strong that no enemy can gain command of the sea. The Democratic platform says "we favor" the maintenance of an army fully adequate to protect the nation's rights, and a fixed policy for the constructive development of a navy. The Democrats have passed the Hay bill, which is nothing but a strike porker in uniform, and the naval committee has reported a bill which strikes out two first class battleships recommended by navy department experts.

The Republican platform declares, as always, for protection of American industries. "Such protection should protect adequately American industry and American labor." The Democratic platform reaffirms its belief in a tariff for revenue only, and unreservedly indorses the Underwood law, although they have repeatedly stated that that law did not have an opportunity to prove its efficacy prior to the war.

The Republican platform declares for the thorough and honest enforcement of the civil service law, and pledges the party to a reorganization of this service. The Democratic platform reaffirms the declarations of the party for the rigid enforcement of the civil service laws, having created 30,000 offices outside of the civil service law, at an annual cost of $44,000,000 to the taxpayers, since March 4, 1913.

There is not a line in the Democratic platform which is not a reminder of the treachery and inefficiency of that party during the last four years. The Baltimore platform of 1912 closes with these words: "Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign." It is to be noted that even Democratic effrontery was not brazen enough to conclude the St. Louis platform with any such falsehood.

SHERIFF WILSON AND HIS DEPUTIES raided the Hotel Belle in Milwaukie several weeks ago and captured over 40 bottles of assorted liquor. Fritz Boyesen, proprietor of the resort, was taken before Justice of the Peace Sievers, entered a plea of not guilty and was convicted in short order. He appealed to the circuit court and a jury of 12 men convicted him again on the same charge. True it is that the jury was out 24 hours, lacking only 17 minutes, but at no time in their deliberations did those 12 men show the slightest inclination to acquit Boyesen.

Circuit Judge Campbell took no middle ground in sentencing the resort proprietor. "You have been before me three times now," said the court. "As far as this county is concerned, you are up against it. I know what kind of a place you have been running since the first of the year, as well as before, from a man who has never appeared on the witness stand. You have violated the law, not once, but many times."

Boyesen immediately secured time to prepare a bill of exceptions and a motion for a new trial. Based entirely on technicalities, objections to the rulings of the court on the admission of certain testimony and to the instructions to the jury were made.

In the meantime, Boyesen is free under $2000 cash bail. He is running his place, probably about the same as before. There is not much doubt as to the guilt or innocence of Boyesen. The strength of the state's case was enough to convince the average citizen, yet the man is free, postponing the delivery of justice through the power of his money, profits from breaking the law.

Six months in the county jail and a fine as large as can be imposed under the prohibition law are what this man Boyesen needs. The cool corridors of the Clackamas county jail are a fine place for reflection, and strange as it may be, a man who pays a prolonged visit to those corridors usually comes out with a different idea as to the laws of the state.

MEN OF CLACKAMAS COUNTY

NO. 1

The Enterprise presents to its readers today the mayor of our fair city, E. C. Hackett, who was elected last December to serve as executive of the city for one year. When he is not running the city's affairs, Mr. Hackett is performing the many duties of chief deputy sheriff of Clackamas county. He has a wide acquaintance throughout the county and has been a stalwart Republican for those many years. His real bug is municipal ownership and he hopes that some day the people of Oregon City will control their own light and power plant and sell electrical energy at a profit to the city. The mayor was formerly a member of the city council, representing the second ward. He lives in the Greenpoint district where he has an opportunity to observe the speeding motorists as they come into town.

5000 EAGER PEOPLE LINE TRACK WHEN TROOPS PASS

It was to be carried, aside from the second battalion of the Oregon National Guard, Battery A of the state artillery. But rush orders from the war department called the artillery to entrain early Wednesday morning and the gunners went through the county seat on a special train at noon. After this people expected nothing, and when the train was sounded on the big fire bell at 4 o'clock, Oregon City presumed that the time of departure of the local boys had been ordered ahead. And once at the track, they were afraid to leave, for fear the troop train should come when they were absent.

Men Are Decked With Flags.

However, the long siege of waiting was worth it. It was dusk when the mighty mogul that drew the train puffed and snorted onto the siding and stopped at the huge water tank. Behind it stretched a train of 23 cars, from 12 of which leaned soldiers—members of Troop A of the cavalry, and of E. F. G. and H companies of the infantry. And most prominent among these were the men of G company, each one of which waved a small American flag in his hand as he leaned from the windows of the cars that were marked with huge banners: "G Company, Oregon National Guard, of Oregon City." The flags that the men held were gifts from Mrs. E. T. Mass, wife of ex-Sheriff Mass, who gave the patriotic emblems to Captain Blanchard to distribute among the local soldiers just before the company entrained at Clackamas station.

These flags made a striking spectacle as they fluttered from the Pullmans occupied by the Oregon City men, and they were jealously guarded by the soldiers, too—who found in them a tangible proof of the regard and honor in which they are held in the county seat. The flags were visible proof that every member of the company was a loyal American, off to the Mexican border on an American mission—the upholding of the principles of liberty.

Citizens Lavish With Gifts.

As the train came to a standstill there was a frantic rush for the cars occupied by G company. Lunches were thrust forward into eager hands, kisses were flung to the departing soldiers, fervent hand-clasps were given and received. Cherries by the basket and in bags were given the men, oranges, melons and other fruit was showered onto their cars. And before half was done that had been planned the thirst of the great engine was satisfied, and with thunderous puffs the train pulled further down the siding, for a second stop.

Then was the Oregon City spirit shown at its best, for many of the people who had gathered to greet the local soldiers turned to the members of the other companies on the coaches. Again lunches and fruit were pressed upon the men going south to obey government orders, and again kisses and hand-clasps were given wholeheartedly to the boys in khaki. And then there were flags—for fully half the people at the side of the train had followed the advice of The Enterprise and taken a national ensign to the depot with them. These flags were sought by the soldiers of the other companies, and were willing given; so that when, five minutes later, the big special pulled out on its way south, from almost every window in the long line of Pullmans there waved the Stars and Stripes, given to the soldiers by patriotic Oregon City people.

Tears Follow Departure.

Such was the greeting that Oregon City gave the soldiers as they passed on their way to the south in answer to the call of President Wilson. In this generous outpouring of national pride people forgot for the moment their own personal sorrow at the departure of loved ones. But as the train resumed its way, tears sprang to many eyes, handkerchiefs fluttered in the half-light, and mingling with the drops of water that fell from the overcast sky were salty drops that glistened on eyelashes and cheeks. The touch of war had come to Oregon City, first with its glamor and thrill of patriotism, and then with its sobering grief and realization of sacrifice.

Oregon City's soldiers—along with several hundred other brave men—had gone to the front.

OVER 200 P. O. MEN MEET HERE

DELEGATES OF THREE ORGANIZATIONS HOLD ANNUAL SESSION AND ELECT OFFICERS.

MILITARY CAMP SEEN

Banquet, Parade and Interesting Talks Are Features of Meeting at Which Representatives from all Parts of State Exchange Ideas.

Two hundred delegates of the Oregon branches of the United National Association of Postal Clerks, the National Association of Letter Carriers and the Association of Rural Carriers gathered in Oregon City Saturday for the annual convention. Many were accompanied by their wives and the total number was between three and four hundred.

Mayor Hackett welcomed the visitors and, in turn, was adorned with one of the badges worn by the delegates. The day was a busy one, each association holding a separate convention. Two met in the Commercial club building, while the city carriers convened in Oddfellows hall. At 6 o'clock the nomination of officers began and as soon as the election was over the delegates paraded down Main street, headed by the Portland Letter Carriers' band.

Delegates Visit Soldiers.

Automobile owners of Oregon City then took the visitors for a ride to Camp Withycombe. The local paper and woolen mills were inspected during the day.

The convention was brought to an end with a banquet in Armory hall, at which Gilbert L. Hedges presided as toastmaster. The Canemah quartet and an orchestra furnished music, and addresses were made by T. Leaton Kirk, of Bremerton, Wash., Herman Wise and the Rev. James Elvin, while President Carl Joehneke, of the mail clerks, President John Etchison, of the carriers, and President Frank Whitteman, of the rural men, made short talks. The banquet was closed by those at the banquet singing, "The Star Spangled Banner."

Albany was selected as the next meeting place for the associations, and the conventions will be held on the last Saturday in June, 1917.

The mail clerks re-elected Carl Joehneke, of this city, president. Other officers named were: P. T. Harris, of Portland, vice-president; J. H. Butler, of Portland, secretary-treasurer; S. B. Dodge, of Newberg, state organizer; E. R. Lemmonson, of The Dalles, sergeant; W. H. Worrell, of Albany, member of the state executive board; Carl Joehneke, of Oregon City, delegate to the Washington state convention to be held at Anacortes, July 3, 4 and 5.

The letter carriers, too, re-elected an Oregon City man president of their association, John L. Etchison. D. R. Grush, of Astoria, was elected vice-president and Fred P. Holm, of Portland, was named secretary-treasurer to serve another term.

Rural Carriers Pick New Heads.

Officers for the coming year of the Rural Carriers' association were elected as follows: President, L. H. Peak, of Monroe; first vice-president, B. E. Sollek, of Boyd; second vice-president, L. D. Howard, of Portland; secretary-treasurer, M. E. Willis, of Yamhill; member of executive committee, E. B. Cornett, of Albany; delegate to the national convention, which meets in Chicago during August, R. W. Smith, of Springfield.

The rural carriers had in all about 60 delegates, and the clerks and city carriers associations had about 70 each.

Patriotism is Demonstrated.

A notable feature of the meeting of the rural carriers was the purchase of a beautiful American flag, which will be displayed at all meetings of the association as a mark of patriotism. The flag was bought and presented by E. E. Chittman, of Gresham, an old soldier, who delivered a stirring patriotic address as he passed the national banner to the president.

A feature of the convention that caused general comment was the absence of J. C. Spagle, one of the most well known of the mail clerks, and a member of the committees on arrangements, program and reception. Inquiry brought to light the fact that Mr. Spagle had answered the president's call for troops, and was at the mobilization camp at Clackamas, a member of G company, Third Oregon Infantry. Mr. Spagle's patriotism was highly commended by the delegates, and later in the day when those in attendance visited Camp Withycombe, there was a general rush to shake hands with the former clerk. Mr. Spagle has been a member of the National Guard for the past nine years, and holds an enviable record as a marksman. At present he is first sergeant of G company, the Oregon City contingent.

Best for Bilious Headaches.

Indigestion quickly develops sick headache, biliousness, bloating, sour stomach, gas on stomach, bad breath or some of the other conditions caused by clogged or irregular bowels. If you have any of these symptoms, take a Foley Cathartic Tablet this evening and you will feel better in the morning. W. B. Vandigraft, Smyrna, Ga., says: "We find Foley Cathartic Tablets the best we have ever used for bilious headaches and I am praising them up to all my friends." Jones Drug Co. (Adv.)

Camp Appears Deserted.

With the departure of the third battalion and the disappearance of the long lines of tents on the open meadow at the western end of the state range, Camp Withycombe this afternoon presented a somewhat deserted appearance. In spite of this however, there were crowds of visitors everywhere and members of the units composing the second battalion managed to find time to see their friends, even though they were busy getting everything in order for leaving and in getting their outfits of federal equipment.

A new activity was also apparent about the grounds in the journeyings in and out of motor trucks laden with supplies, both coming in and going out for shipment south. The addition of a number of motor trucks to the string of horse-drawn vehicles that have heretofore been in use at camp has greatly expedited the movement of supplies. Or rather it had perhaps better be said that the motor trucks were a great help until one of the broke down just inside the grounds and blocked the road both ways for awhile.

BOY, AGED 17 YEARS, SEES HIS SISTER FOR FIRST TIME IN LIFE

MISS IRENE SMITH COMES TO OREGON CITY FROM CHICAGO TO PAY HIM VISIT.

Seventeen-year-old Frank Smith, Terrill saw his sister, Miss Irene Smith, for the first time Wednesday. The reunion was a happy one, and during the next two weeks the two will be busy getting acquainted.

The Smith family was broken up by the death of the mother 17 years ago in Colorado, when the boy was two weeks old. Three of the children went to Chicago, while Frank Smith found his way into the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Terrill. He was adopted by the Terrill family, now living in Oregon City.

In the meantime, the other children were living in Chicago. Miss Irene Smith, a stenographer in a Chicago railway office, was given her annual vacation this summer and decided to come to the coast and meet her stranger brother.

WOMAN AVOIDS OPERATION

Medicine Which Made Surgeon's Work Unnecessary.

Astoria, N. Y.—"For two years I was feeling ill and took all kinds of tonics. I was getting worse every day. I had chills, my head would ache, I was always tired. I could not walk straight because of the pain in my back and I had pains in my stomach. I went to a doctor and he said I must go under an operation, but I did not go. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and told my husband about it. I said 'I know nothing will help me but I will try this.' I found myself improving from the very first bottle, and in two weeks time I was able to sit down and eat a hearty breakfast with my husband, which I had not done for two years. I am now in the best of health and did not have the operation."—Mrs. JOHN A. KOENIG, 602 Flushing Avenue, Astoria, N. Y.

Every one dreads the surgeon's knife and the operating table. Sometimes nothing else will do; but many times doctors say they are necessary when they are not. Letter after letter comes to the Pinkham Laboratory, telling how operations were advised and were not performed; or, if performed, did no good, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was used and good health followed.

If you want advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.
