"BUY IT IN OREGON CITY ALWAYS"

A Powerful Stimulant

By OSCAR COX

"Miss Brown, of yo' don' mind I like to have yo' come take keer o' de chillen. Ma wife's powerful weak and can't do nothin' at all. She's got to be hospitable dis afternoon."

Miss Brown, a colored girl twenty years of age, said she wouldn't mind obliging Mr. Jones. It occurred to her that if Mrs. Jones should die she might be Mrs. Jones herself. Jones was a well-to-do darky on the shady side of forty and had three pickaninies. Miss Brown supported herself by washing and ironing and thought that if she could permanently change her occupation to taking care of a family it would be an advantage.

"When do yo' want me to come, Mr. Jones?" she inquired.

"Ma wife's gwine to be hospitable about 4 o'clock. Reckon yo' mought come round about half past 4."

"All right, Mr. Jones. I'll be dar'."

Mrs. Jones was removed in the hospital ambulance on time, and half an hour later Miss Brown, who was commonly called Sue by her employers, settled herself down in her place. The children were playing in the street, and Sue did not disturb them. She was taking an eye inventory of the premises and making a mental rearrangement of the furniture when Mrs. Jones would be removed from the hospital to the cemetery. Mr. Jones, whose name, stripped of euphony, was simply Mose, returned from conveying his wife with a solemn countenance to find that Sue had prepared a cup of tea for him and had it set out on the table with a piece of corn pone.

"I thought yo'd come home needin' somepin to trace yo' up, Mr. Jones," said the girl.

Her thoughtfulness braced up Mose as much as the refreshments.

"How did yo' leave yo' po' wife?" she asked.

"Precely."

"Is she gwine to pull through?"

"Don' know; she's powerful sick."

Mrs. Jones lost instead of gained. She was worried about her children, and Mose found it necessary to tell her that he had secured the services of some one to take care of them. He did not tell her that he had got a young woman, for he had seen evidences already that she was expecting to step into his wife's shoes, and he knew that this would worry her.

Perhaps it would have gone well with Sue had she curbed her impatience. Though Mrs. Jones was reported getting weaker every day, she hung on in a very aggravating way. She got tired asking Mose after his visits to the hospital how he had found his wife, hearing only the repetition, "Precely, very precely; she's gwine down hill powerful fast." So it occurred to the girl to go to the hospital and ask questions on her own account. She bought a five-cent posy and, appearing at the hospital door, was received by an attendant.

"Tell Mrs. Jones," she said, offering the posy, "dat a frien' ob de family brought her de flowers and hopes she's gettin' better."

The attendant took the flowers and was turning away when Sue asked:

"Mrs. Jones mighty sick?"

"She's very low."

"Not long to live, I reckon?"

"'Rout how long she gwine to las'?"

"The doctor doesn't expect her to live the week out."

Sue took her departure, greatly comforted. The attendant took the posy to Mrs. Jones with the message, Mrs. Jones was too ill to appreciate the kind attention, but the faculty of curiosity had not yet deserted her, and she asked if the friend of the family had left a name. The nurse said she had not, whereupon Mrs. Jones asked for a description of her and was told that she was a trim colored girl about twenty years old.

That night a hurry call was sent for Mose to come to the hospital to see his wife before she died. Mose obeyed the summons and found the invalid in a state of collapse. When told that her husband was there she rallied, and Mose went to her bedside.

"Mose," she said, "tak' good care ob de chillen when I'm daid."

"Sartin'."

"Gib all my frien's my lub, and thank de cull'd gal fo' de flowers she bring me de iver day."

"Wha' cull'd gal?"

"Dunno. She said she was a frien' ob de family."

"I won't."

Mose checked himself, but too late. Urged to tell what he wondered at, he admitted that Sue might have left the flowers, and when asked who Sue was he admitted that she was the woman who was taking care of the children. Perhaps it was Mose's evident desire to keep something back. At any rate, the mother took fright. She raised herself with marvelous strength considering her condition and between the nurse and her husband got the story, including some admissions from the latter as to Sue's kind solicitude in his behalf.

"Yo' Mose," she said, "yo' waitin' fo' me to die to marry dat gal?"

"I hain't no sech thing."

"De gal's waitin' fo' me to die to marry yo' Yo' s'pose I gwine to turn de chillen over to a gal like dat? No, sah. I's gwine to get wed. Call de ambulance. I's gwine home right off."

She was not permitted to carry out her assertion, but she rallied from that moment and a week later was back in her own domicile. Miss Brown was warned by Mose of her coming and departed in time to avoid a scene.

STATE WORK PLANNED

GRANGE HOLDS MEET

Suffrage and Prohibition Favored at National Convention

Oregon Building, P. P. L. E., Dec. 1:—C. E. Spence, master of the Oregon State Grange, came to attend the sessions of the National Grange, and is returning to Oregon enthusiastic over the work accomplished. While Woman Suffrage was defeated by the National Grange last year by a vote of 26 to 24, the women won out this year by a vote of 30 to 25. Mr. Spence considers this change of front remarkable and the endorsement of Woman's Suffrage as a great step forward.

Last year, Prohibition was treated in a rather indefinite way, while this year the National Grange was practically a unit in endorsing National prohibition. The present conservation policy of the Forestry department came in for endorsement, and very progressive ideas on Rural Credits were adopted as the policy of the National Grange.

It was decided to demand that the Government provide for rural credit purposes some circulating medium as in the case of the Regional Banks. The Grange arrayed itself against bonding of railroad construction, largely on the idea that road building is still in its experimental stage. It also declared in favor of building market roads first. There was practically unanimous opposition to the proposed increase of army, navy and armament. The National Grange insists on raising the standard of citizenship rather than large sums of money for destructive purpose. Strong peace resolutions were adopted.

It was also agreed that there should be a uniformity of tax laws as affecting states, this to prevent the tax dodging that has become so flagrant on the part of wealthy citizens owning property in many states. The National Grange is composed of the Master and Matron of the State Granges of the nation, and at this time fifty-seven were present, representing practically all the states of the Union. Mr. Spence spent considerable time at the Oregon Building and on the Exposition grounds and expressed the confidence that Oregon has made a wonderfully effective showing here, one from which the state is certain to derive great benefit. B. G. Leedy, of Corvallis, formerly Master of the State Grange, was also here, and was equally enthusiastic over the Oregon showing.

Oregon Development League to Widen Scope of Its Activities

Every indication points to the coming of prosperity for the West. All reports from the East and Middle West are most encouraging and it is reasonable to assume that the West will be permitted to share in the "good times coming."

In the past the Oregon Development League was a factor in building the State, principally from the fact that this League was composed of the progressive men and organizations in every community. In the merging of the commercial bodies of Portland, the League, to some extent, lost its identity and really ceased to exist. The time is now ripe for a re-organization on broader and well defined lines.

In order to effect such a State organization, a convention is hereby called to meet in Portland on Friday, December 31st immediately following the State Irrigation Congress, at which Congress it is expected fully five hundred delegates will be present.

Many, if not all of the Irrigation Congress delegates, would well represent their respective communities in the League convention. Representatives of the various Commercial Organizations, Cities and Towns, Granges and Farmers' Union, and kindred organizations are being invited to attend.

WEIRD TALE TOLD

County Seat Woman Reports Assault on Oregon City Police

Mrs. E. B. Nevitt, who lives in the downtown section of the county seat, reported to the Oregon City police this week that she had been assaulted and felled to the ground by a mysterious stranger as she left her house Monday evening at half past seven. Mrs. Nevitt says she was rendered unconscious by the blow, and that it was a quarter of an hour before she recovered.

Patrolman Woodward responded to her call for aid, but was unable to discover any clues that would lead to a solution of the reported attack. Though the door of the house was unlocked, there was no evidence of robbery within, nor were there any footprints outside to show in which direction any thug might have escaped. Mrs. Nevitt says she was struck from behind, and that she is therefore unable to give any description of her assailant.

William Wilson Breaks Record and Makes Perfectly Good "Pinch"

William J. Wilson, sheriff of Clackamas county, Tuesday night arrested J. M. Christ, who is wanted in Portland for beating a board bill—according to the report sent out by Portland authorities with his description. Somebody told the sheriff that the man had just arrived in the city and gave him a description of the fugitive, and the sheriff went out and made the arrest.

The Courier is glad to hear that Sheriff Wilson has made an arrest in which the right man figures, and trusts that the county press will do its share in appraising the public of this matter. Up to this time quite a number of people have been apprehended by the sheriff's office, but in a large number of cases they have subsequently developed not to be the people desired at all.

A man who beats his board bill is a pretty desperate sort of a cuss, and the Courier hopes the sheriff will get special reward for overhauling and overpowering such a horrible criminal.

T. P. Randall Given Hard Job by Circuit Judge Campbell

Thomas Randall has been named receiver of the Northwestern Association, which for some years past has been "developing" Redland Orchards and offering fruit tracts for sale on the installment plan under the careful management of Jesse Hazell. Mr. Hazell recently made application for bankruptcy, and said his own liabilities were $27,000, while the liabilities of himself and the Northwestern Association were $88,000. Immediately following his application to be adjudged bankrupt, three suits against his concern were filed, and Judge Campbell started in untangling the affairs of the outfit by appointing a receiver.

The orchard tracts offered for sale comprise an aggregate of 204 acres. It is said that contracts for the sale of 50 five-acre tracts have already been secured by Hazell, which is doing pretty well for a 204-acre parcel of land.

WRITTEN BY CHILDREN.

Some Famous Hymns That Have Outlived Their Authors.

Some of the best known hymns in the language have been written by children. Everybody knows "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," a hymn with a unique record. It was the first hymn the author, Dr. Ray Palmer, ever wrote. It is by far the most popular of his hymns. It was written when he was a mere lad, and he survived its publication and popularity sixty years. It was set to music in the year of its birth and has always been sung to the same tune.

One of the best known hymns in the world is "There Is a Land of Pure Delight." Yet it was written by Isaac Watts before he reached manhood. It is said that he was staying in the Isle of Wight and looking across to Hampshire when he penned the lines:

Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood
Stand dressed in living green.

That fine soldierly hymn, "Oft In Danger, Oft In Woe, Onward, Christian, Onward Go," was actually written by a boy and girl who never saw each other. The boy was poor Henry Kirke White, who died before he reached manhood, and the girl was Frances Fuller-Maitland.

The fact is that when the boy poet died the little girl was not born. Exactly when Kirke White wrote his verses is not known, for they were found among his papers after his death. He had worked some sums in algebra on the same sheet.

Twenty years later the little Frances, fourteen years old, wrote the verses beginning respectively, "Let your drooping hearts be glad," "Let not sorrow dim your eye," and "Onward, then, to battle move," which made a fine hymn of what was really only a set of verses.

Frances Ridley Havergal wrote one of her best known hymns when she was a girl of fifteen. In fact, it was the first thing of any importance she ever penned. This is the pathetic hymn, "Thy Life Was Given For Me."

It was scribbled on the back of a circular in pencil and first read to an old, bedridden woman who liked it so much that the little girl repeated of her first intention to burn it, and her father wrote the well known tune, "Baba, to it—London Tit-Bits.

DAIRY and CREAMERY

DAIRY and CREAMERY

GARGET OR MAMMITIS.

Old Fashioned Remedy That Rarely Fails of Success.

As a graduate of Toronto Veterinary college and a practitioner of twenty years' experience, writes a correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman, I wish to give a little of my observation and experience of that ugly condition of a cow's udder, garget or mammitis.

My practice and observation have led me to believe that true garget is due to a condition of the system and manifests itself locally, just as do strangles or colic distemper in horses, which is a septic fever, yet manifests itself locally by a tumor in the intermaxillary space and usually suppurates.

In the large number of cases to which I have been called I always find symptoms of more or less indigestion (when seemingly there was no cause), a partially dry muzzle, an increase in pulse rate, some temperature and a large decrease of milk flow. For all such cases I prescribe the following old fashioned remedy, which has proved almost a specific for this disease: One pound of sulphate of soda or glauber salts, a heaping tablespoonful of pulverized ginger and two of common salt. This is dissolved in two quarts of hot water and given carefully and slowly as a drench. After forty-eight hours give a half pound of the salts in the same manner.

Should the case seem obstinate give another half dose after another forty-eight hours. This salt is one of the best liver tonics for cattle and is almost a specific for garget. Very often we are called to cases where we find a badly swollen udder, a partial or entire suppression of milk flow and other conditions that would lead us to say the case was garget. A few questions revealed the fact that some of the teats were obstructed and a straw, knitting needle or some other instrument had been used to open up the teat, with the result of a case of acute mammitis. Such cases are not garget and seldom recover. The injured and diseased quarters become indurated and never produce milk again.

WASHING THE BUTTER.

Temperature of Water Should Be About Fifty Degrees.

No harm whatever is done to butter by washing in water colder than the contents of the churn—provided it is not akin to ice water, which last has the effect of chilling the butter grains somewhat, and in working over it tends to hold an excess of moisture, as the butter cannot be made sufficiently compact to express the surplus moisture below the governmental limit of about 15 per cent. Water at about 50 degrees is sufficiently cold, floats on the butter from the fluid mass, and the second washing leaves the butter ready for either the worker or, what is better, working it in the churn, incorporating the salt at the same time.

No attempt should be made to work the butter into lumps before incorporating the salt. Every 100 pounds of finished butter has in its makeup fifteen pounds of water and six pounds of salt, so wet butter cannot be over-salted unless so much is added that this fifteen pounds of water cannot dissolve it and the butter is filled with undissolved salt. Add as many ounces of salt to this wet butter as you had found the previous churning, and you will not go very far from a correct salting of the butter.—Rural New Yorker.

The Heavy Milker.

The heavy winter milker is usually the best and most persistent cow; give her an opportunity to make greatest profits. Prepare the cows and heifers for spring calving. A good rest of from one to two months and good feeding while dry insure greatest production and profits in the next lactation period. It is a well established fact that a long first lactation period for heifers induces greatest persistency in milking and that a thorough preparation for the first and succeeding lactation periods induces greater capacity for milk production by thorough udder distention.

Alfalfa and Milk Production.

Utah farmers have maintained that the second crop of alfalfa is less valuable for milk production than either the first or third cutting. Experiments conducted by the Utah experiment station indicate that the second crop is equal to either the first or third as a milk producer and is fed with greater economy.

Beating a Ford

I saw a large auto in town Thursday that held a trump over the Ford as a climber. The owner had a long ladder strapped on the side so he could climb a hill when he came to it.—(Columbia Herald.)

Fellow forged a check recently and ran away in a Ford car, which he disguised by removing the body. Foolish man—if he'd left the Ford alone it would have been hard to pick him in a crowd. But he monkeyed with it, and got caught.

SPEED OF THE SPARK.

A Fly Ball In New York and a Flash to the Pacific Coast.

Speed! Speed! That is the cry of the wire today, says Mr. Robert Weiss Ritchie in an article in Harper's Magazine, in which he makes vivid the swiftness and concentration with which the telegraph and the men who serve it must work when the clamor of the news hungry makes a delay of seconds intolerable.

Once a year in this country comes a test that cracks the nerves of men who groom the wire. This is when the baseball madness advances into the dog days of the so called world's series, when the police have to cleave a lane through the pack watching bulletin boards. Tens of thousands witness the games with their own eyes; many millions demand to see spectators by proxy.

Over the entire stretch of wire from the Polo grounds in New York to San Francisco the circuit is made "blind." It cannot be broken by human agency. All is ready. From Harlem to the Golden Gate the strain is at maximum; men are tensed to action; the wire is alive.

"Cobb flies to Murphy," dictates the baseball reporter in the press stand, judging the trajectory of the batted ball almost with the crack of the bat.

"Cobb flies to Murphy," calls the assistant sporting editor of the San Francisco evening paper, and his voice is megaphoned to the crowd that blocks Kearny street. Before the high fly batted by Cobb on the Polo grounds has smacked the glove of Murphy in the outfield the traffic policeman standing by Lotta's fountain in the Pacific coast city knows the play is made. "And is caught out," the reporter in the press stand supplements.

"Murphy never misses 'em," comments the San Francisco policeman before the outfielder has returned the ball to the pitcher's box.

LUXURY IN THE BASTILLE.

The Famous French Prison During the Reign of Louis XIII.

It was during the reign of Louis XIII. that the Bastille became recognized as a prison, especially for notable persons suspected of treachery against the French government. Richeieu used it for the secure lodgment of troublesome opponents, and during his time the celebrated fortress became the luxurious prison of a powerful aristocracy.

Apart from the necessary restrictions, a star in the famous prison of Paris was little more than an agreeable diversion. It seemed indeed as though the king was determined to show his kindness. He expressed great anxiety for the comfort of his prisoners.

Money could buy in the Bastille all the luxury that could be obtained outside, and should a poor man stray within the impenetrable walls the king was so eager to prove his hospitality that he at once allowed him a reasonable pension. The rooms in which the prisoners were confined were lofty and well aired; the furniture was arranged according to the taste of the occupant.

Mme. de Stael, for instance, hung her walls with rich tapestries, and many a distinguished culprit carried with him to the Faubourg St. Antoine his family portraits or a valuable library.

Nor is it in the least significant that the prison barber visited his patrons every morning with a silver basin, perfumed soap and embroidered towels. The best wines, well cooked, were furnished to the better class of prisoners, and at the close of the meals they exchanged visits, played cards and made the walls of the gloomy looking prison ring with their merriment.

One of Faib's Predictions.

In 1874 Professor Rudolph Faib predicted an eruption of Etna on Aug. 27. He offered a Vienna order to write an account of it if the editor would send him to Sicily. Faib was commissioned. When he reached Etna there was not the slightest sign of disturbance. As the 27th approached Faib was tortured with anxiety and sleepless nights watching the volcano. Nothing happened on the 27th and 28th. The following morning the servant rushed into the professor's room shouting, "An eruption, a terrible eruption!" Faib saw the spectacle and sent off his dispatch.

"One" as a Pronoun.

I have never been saluted with the use of the word "one" as a pronoun. It takes a word juggle to attempt it and get away with it. Unless one feels that one has won one's spurs in this respect and can extricate oneself from the mess one gets oneself and one's readers into one should avoid the use of the word one in referring to oneself as one would a plague.—Westminster Gazette.

Just So.

"What brought you to housebreaking, my man?"

"Lost my job as a baseball pitcher, judge."

"Well, you are foolish to go into burglary if you are poor at locating the plate."—Indianapolis News.

And So Forth.

"Willie," said the teacher of the juvenile class, "what is the term 'etc.' used for?"

"It is used to make people believe that we know a lot more than we really do," replied the bright youngster.—Chicago News.
