

"The Goose Girl" Comedy Romance at the Grand Sunday

"The Goose Girl," produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, which is to be the offering on Sunday, January 2, at the Grand Theatre with little Marguerite Clark in the stellar role of the title character, should prove a rare treat for high-class audiences. It is not often that the imagination is led so delightfully far afield from the monotonous routine and problems of daily life into the realms of romantic and far-distant principalities.

The ambitions of the chancellor of Ehrenstein, who wants to put his own daughter on the throne, are responsible for the complications—for the kidnapping of the real Princess in her infancy, for the attempt, fifteen years later, to identify the chancellor's child as the lost Princess; and even for the final rearrangement of the many threads in the narrative. It is hard to say whether Miss Clark, who appears by the courtesy of the Famous Players, is more fascinating as "The Goose Girl" or as the real Princess, when she is finally seated on her rightful throne.

FRENCH LACK MATCHES

One Result of War is Shortage of Wood for Making Conventions

Commenting on one phase of the European war, which has brought on a shortage of matches in the French republic, a Paris newspaper says:

"For several months the Government has been selling to our taxpayers some matches of American manufacture which have given full satisfaction to the public—excellent matches with long stems, and matches that lighted surely and without difficulty. Also, some American matches that had shorter stems and black heads were placed on sale. But now both of these kinds have become exhausted, and little by little we have had to return to the matches of former times, which gave but poor satisfaction and of which it has been said that they would light only in the inspiration of poets and musicians.

"Mr. Ricard, director general of the French State factories, said: 'We find ourselves in a most precarious situation as to the manufacture of matches. We continue to make them as best we are able. It is true that this home manufacture has been largely reduced from that of normal times, but it has not been wholly interrupted. It is the matchwork that we mostly lack. So far, we have hardly been able to respond to half of the needs of the country, and we have looked to several foreign countries, particularly the United States, Sweden, Italy, Switzerland, Indo-China, and even Japan.'

CHERRYVILLE

A Happy New Year to everybody! As the days begin to lengthen the cold begins to strengthen.

Quite a fall of snow has come upon us up here in the mountains, and old-timers predict a big fall of the "beautiful" before the season is over. Russel Rankin, of Hillsboro, was up here on a visit last week and he thinks that he will come back and locate here for his health.

A masked ball will be held at the Bolkins' place on New Year's Eve and everybody is invited.

Pete Stone and wife went down to visit the wife's folks near Oregon City during the holidays.

Our busy (?) congressman introduced a resolution to have Judge Wolverson's last decision, anent the Land Grant in the back part of the Congressional Record without comment of any kind. Here would have been a chance to show a little belated zeal in a cause when he has been very lukewarm.

STING OF THE AGY.

A Madagascar Plant That Can Drive Men Mad With Pain.

Among the many peculiar and disconcerting plants and creatures that abound in Madagascar, probably none is more surprising and disconcerting than the agy tree, so called, which is not a tree, but a climbing plant. The following incident, quoted by Mr. James Sibree, F. R. G. S., in "A Naturalist in Madagascar," illustrates the painful result of contact with the agy. The story is told by a Mr. Montgomery:

Walking under some trees and pushing aside the reeds and grass, I was startled by a sudden tingling and prickling sensation over the backs of my hands and fingers. I stopped in sudden surprise, for the pain was severe, and I had touched nothing except the grass. But in another minute the pain increased, the tingling, burning sensation seemed to be extending rapidly up my wrists, and I could see nothing to cause it. As I lowered my head to look scolding pain shot into my ears and neck and grew worse every instant. Dazed and bewildered, I stood a few seconds in helplessness, for I could neither see nor guess at the cause of the terrible distress. Then I got back to my company with agony written plain enough on every line of my face.

The men started up when they saw me, crying, "You have been stung by the agy!" Some of them led me to a seat, others rushed for water from the river, and two or three brought sand heaped up in their hands. Then they chafed me with the sand and water to take out the stinging hairs, which they knew caused the mischief. As they rubbed me I felt the pain abate, and after they had chafed me for about a quarter of an hour I was comparatively free from pain. While the men were rubbing me I was able to discern to some extent the cause of my distress. Countless hairs, like tiny arrows, almost transparent, pointed at either end and from a third to a fourth of an inch long had dropped on me in an invisible shower from the agy tree as I stood under it. Before I came away that afternoon, very cautiously I ventured to examine the tree at a little distance and found that the tiny hairs grew outside a thickish pod or shell not quite so large as a small banana. The pods were fully ripe (unluckily for me) just at that time, and the light wind was scattering their coverings.

New Zealand's Natural Gas.

New Zealand has many mineral springs percolated by a natural indomitable gas. At some of the spas not only is the mineral water used for bathing and drinking purposes, but the natural steam is used for vapor baths, and the whole establishment is lighted, its rooms warmed and its meals cooked by the natural gas.

STORY OF A MEAN MAN.

The Millionaire Who Refused a Loan to Alexander Dumas.

"The meanest man I ever knew," said Mark Twain to a fellow traveler he met on shipboard, "lived in Hannibal. He sold his soul-in-law the hair share of a cow and then refused to give him any milk because he had only sold him the front half."

Well, that story may be apocryphal, although there are lots of men who rise to its standard of meanness, but the following is true: When Alexander Dumas the elder was short of cash he wrote a charming little note to a millionaire who was proclaimed in every paper to be a model of generosity. Dumas ended his letter with some verses, half jocular, half serious. In fact, the letter was a literary gem.

This financier, who respected literary men for their talents, but had little trust in their power or will to pay their debts, refused Dumas' request. The same evening he entertained some men of letters at his mansion, and the conversation turned on the value of autographs.

"Have such trifles a commercial value?" asked the millionaire.

"Certainly," replied one of the guests. "A letter by Hugo or Lamartine or Gautier is more than worth its weight in gold."

"And a letter by Dumas—this one, for instance?"

"I will give you 5 louis for it?"

"Agreed!"

And that generous, dapper millionaire financier, who had been making bargains—and nothing else—all his life, sold for more than 100 francs the letter of Dumas, whom he had refused to oblige in the morning. Could meanness go further?—Pearson's.

One Way to Cut Brass.

To cut sheet brass chemically the following method meets with great success: Make a strong solution of bichloride of mercury in alcohol. With a quill pen draw a line across the brass where it is to be cut. Let it dry on and with the same pen draw over this line with nitric acid. The brass may then be broken across like glass that has been cut with a diamond.—Exchange.

Recommendation Not Necessary.

"So you're going to leave us, Mary?"

"Yes, mum. I've got to."

"And do you want me to give you a letter of recommendation?"

"It isn't necessary, mum. The man I'm going to work for is willing to take chances. I'm leavin' to get married."—Detroit Free Press.

The Spirit of Charity.

"I'm awfully sorry that my engagements prevent my attending your charity concert, but I shall be with you in spirit."

"Splendid! And where would you like your spirit to sit? I have tickets here for $2.50, $5 and $10."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"Printing with a punch"—at the Courier.

The Mole.

The most courageous of all living things is, by common consent of naturalists, the mole. Seemingly without any sense of fear whatever, the mole will fight anything that crosses its path. Neither giving nor asking quarter, it tears away at its adversary until it kills it or is itself killed. The mole's appetite is in keeping with its courage, and it thinks nothing of eating its own weight. In appetite the spider is a close second to the mole, but when it comes to fighting the mole carries the palm.

LIGHTEN THE CHAIN.

Is it not a thing divine to have a scale which, none know how, has the wonderful and unending power to lighten the weight of that enormous chain which all the living in common drag behind them?—Victor Hugo.

Touching.

She—Your friend Jim was here this morning asking for you and told me such a touching story. He (absentmindedly)—For how much?—Baltimore American.
