

CEREMONY WITNESSED BY VISITING DELEGATES

The special train bearing more than 200 delegates of the National Editorial Association and friends who came to Oregon City Saturday afternoon to attend the dedication ceremony of the monument erected to the Oregon Spectator, the first newspaper to be established on the Pacific coast, arrived over the lines of the Portland Railway, Light & Power company at 4:45 o'clock and left again for Portland immediately following the ceremonies in order that the delegates might reach that city in time to attend a banquet scheduled for seven o'clock. A large number of the delegates made the trip from Portland to Oregon City by auto in order that they might be able to enjoy the scenic grandeur of the trip enroute.

Arrived at the site of the monument, which is the location of the building that housed the Spectator at the time of its founding, and is located on the property of the Hawley Pulp & Paper company on Main street, the dedication ceremonies were carried out according to a previously announced program under the supervision of E. E. Brodie, editor of the Morning Enterprise and National Committeeman of the Editorial Association.

Mrs. Eva Emery Dye was the first speaker introduced by the chairman and her few well-chosen remarks in welcome were well received.

Mr. W. P. Hawley, president of the Mill company, was next to be introduced, speaking only a few words before giving way to the following speaker, George H. Himes, recorder of the Oregon Historical society. Mr. Himes received the closest attention from his auditors, his reputation as an authority on all matters concerning the history of the state assuring his hearers some interesting insight into the early history of the Oregon country.

The unveiling of the monument to the Spectator was performed by Mrs. Guy U. Hardy, wife of the president of the N. E. A., and Aaron Walt, grand-son of Aaron Walt, fourth editor of the Spectator, and the assemblage voiced their approbation of the choice of Mr. Hawley, who selected the great piece of granite which forms the pile, with prolonged applause.

The last speaker of the afternoon, and one not scheduled on the program, was Mr. Albright, of Gallatin, Tennessee, vice president of the N. E. A., who in a few powerful sentences impressed his hearers with the profound impressions which he has received during his visit in Oregon and on the Pacific coast and gave them reason to consider the natural advantages which it is their everyday privilege to enjoy.

At the close of the speaking Mr. Brodie announced the invitation of Mr. W. P. Hawley to the visitors to inspect the great paper-making machine in operation in one of the mill buildings and the majority took advantage of the invitation to see at first hand the process of making into the finished sheet the pulp which forms the paper on which the news of the day is printed.

The Oregon City Woolen Mill company had prepared a great number of artistic blankets, made from the wool weaves for which the company is famed, and these were distributed among the visitors, receiving a fund of pleasurable comment. They were weaves of conventional and Indian designs and many of the recipients declared that the miniature blankets would receive a prominent position among the souvenirs which they have received during their tour of the coast.

The special train carrying the party left at 5:45 o'clock for Portland.

The little Misses Mildred and Miriam Swafford, twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George Swafford, acted as flower girls during the dedication ceremony and the rose bouquets supplied by the Susanah Lee Barlow chapter, D. A. R., found eager acceptance when proffered by those dainty maids.

PARCEL POST LIMIT RAISED FOR PURPOSE SHIPPING ARMY FOOD

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Authority to increase temporarily the parcel post weight limit to 125 pounds, so that buyers of army food may take full advantage of opportunity to purchase through postmasters and letter carriers, was granted the postmaster general by interstate commerce commission. It also was announced that during the sale buyers might place several orders at the same time without paying the initial postal charge of 5 cents a pound more than once.

NATIONAL BODY OF EDITORS ARE FAIRS BOOSTERS

Robert Tozier, Seventeenth President of the National Editorial Association.

The National Editorial Association, in its inception, has been known as official booster of Expositions, as well as the forerunner of the great educational affairs.

Coming into life at the Cotton Exposition at New Orleans in 1885, it has persistently maintained a credible record and has either visited in a body or held its annual convention in cities in which expositions are being held. As early as 1889, when the organization held its annual convention in Portland, resolutions were passed favoring the holding of an exposition in Portland in 1902.

The Buffalo Exposition of 1901 and the Charleston Exposition of 1902 crowded Portland out, but Portland landed for 1905 and the body came here from annual convention in Oklahoma. My memory recalls the following Exposition cities favored with the presence of this, the greatest aggregation of organized newspaper workers in any country.

1885—Convention at New Orleans.
1892—Convention in California.
1893—Convention held during World's Fair in Chicago.

1898—Convention held in Denver.

1901—Convention held in Pan-American Exposition City, Buffalo.

1902—Convention held in Hot Springs, Arkansas and at the close of same, the West Indian Exposition at Charleston was visited.

1904—Convention held in Louisiana Purchase Exposition City, St. Louis.

1905—Convention held in Guthrie, Oklahoma and Oriental Fair City Portland, were visited.

1907—Convention held in historic Jamestown.

1909—Annual convention held in Alaska-Yukon Exposition City, Seattle.

1915—Convention held during World's Fair at San Francisco.

The time is near in which to hold another Exposition on the North American Continent and should our neighbors, British Columbia, which is joining with the States of Oregon and Washington in entertaining the members of the 1919 annual convention of the National Editorial Assn., see fit to promote an affair of this character, this exposition booster will give its endorsement.

LOCAL NEWSPAPERMAN AND FAMILY WILL GO TO KLAMATH FALLS

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Robey and the former's sister, Miss Gladys Robey, who has been an instructor of English and domestic science in the Eugene high school, left this morning for Klamath Falls, where they are to visit on a large ranch of friends, and are to attend the Elks' convention to be held at Klamath Lake. They will be accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Olson, formerly of this city, but now of Portland, Mr. Olson being connected with the Oregonian.

The party is making the trip in the Robey automobile, and are going by way of Mount Hood, through Government Camp. Mr. Robey believes this a better road than the other two roads, one of which goes by way of the McKenzie trail, which is considered in poor condition.

Mr. Robey, who has been editor and manager of the Courier, is looking forward to having a most enjoyable vacation.

BILL PROVIDING FOR WATERSHED RESERVE IS MAKING PROGRESS

Action on the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative Hawley of Oregon on July 30 for the reservation of certain lands in Oregon is reported in recent advices from Washington as making favorable progress and it is not anticipated that any serious opposition will be met during its consideration and that it will become law in due course.

The bill is of special interest to the residents and property owners of Oregon City because of the clause it carries which will assure a perpetual watershed for the source of the water supply of this city. The land included in the reserve totals approximately 10 sections lying along the South and Middle forks of the Clackamas river about twenty-one mile from this city.

In the early days of the war the officer in charge of a British post deep in the heart of Africa received this wireless message from his superior officer:

"War declared. Arrest all enemy aliens in your district."

With commendable promptness the superior received this reply:

"Have arrested seven Germans, three Belgians, two Frenchmen, two Italians, an Austrian and an American. Please say who we're at war with."—American Boy.

PHOTOGRAPH OF COPY OF FIRST ISSUE OF THE OREGON SPECTATOR PUBLISHED FEB. 5, 1846

HISTORY OF "SPECTATOR" IN DAYS WHEN NEWS TRAVELED BY STEAMER OR OVERLAND CARAVAN ARE RECALLED BY VISIT OF NATIONAL EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION TO OREGON CITY.

Seventy-three years, six months, and three days ago, on February 5, 1846, before the Pacific coast was bound to the East with innumerable thews of cables and steel rails, and when the only pony telegraph service available for the dissemination of the world's news was the pony express then existing across the Great Plains, a group of the pioneer residents of Oregon City, then seat of government for the provincial government of the Oregon Territory, in their determination to promote the industries of the Territory founded The Oregon Spectator, the first newspaper to be established west of the Rocky Mountains.

The visit of the National Editorial Association in this city today is for the purpose of assisting in the dedication ceremonies and of witnessing the unveiling of the monument that will mark the site of the home of The Spectator and stand as a tribute to the men who were responsible for its birth and were associated with it during its comparatively short career. The unveiling of this monument, erected through the magnanimity and generosity of W. P. Hawley, Sr., president of the Hawley Pulp & Paper Mill Company, and his son, W. P. Hawley, Jr., general manager of the same concern, on the site of the location of the building that was the home of The Spectator, forms one of the noteworthy features of the national convention of the National Editorial Association in its visit to the Pacific Northwest.

The Spectator was established through the organization of the Oregon Printing Association, the officers of which were as follows: W. G. T'Vault, president; J. W. Nesmith, vice-president; John P. Brooks, secretary; George Abernethy, treasurer; Robert Newell, John E. Long and John R. Couch, directors.

Data collected by George H. Himes, curator and secretary of the Oregon Historical Society, show that the press used in printing the Spectator was a Washington hand press, bed 25 by 38 inches. The plant was procured in New York through the instrumentality of Governor George Abernethy, who was reimbursed for his expenditures and effort later by the printing association.

The Spectator began its career pledged to support no exclusive party politics and continued the nonpartisan policy until February 3, 1852, when for the first time the Spectator became a distinctly political journal, championing the cause of the Whig party.

The first editor of the Spectator was Colonel William G. T'Vault, a pioneer of 1845, who at the same time was the post master-general of the provisional government. His editorial salary was at the rate of $300 a year. Colonel T'Vault was a native of Kentucky, a lawyer by profession, with some newspaper experience gained in Arkansas. Politically he was an uncompromising democrat of the Jeffersonian school, but the constitutionality of the printing association made it necessary for him to bury his political beliefs.

However well he may have tried to do so, his efforts, apparently were not pleasing to the members of the association, as he retired from the editorial post of the paper on April 2, 1846.

John Fleming, who came to Oregon from Ohio, was the first printer of the Spectator. On April 16, 1846, Henry A. G. Lee assumed editorship of the Spectator, remaining at this post less than four months, for his retirement as editor is noted in the Spectator of August 6, 1846.

From this time until October 1, John Fleming, the printer, edited the paper. Then George L. Curry, who had just arrived over the plains from St. Louis, was installed in the editor's chair. Incidentally, records show Mr. Lee to have been in the first party of immigrants who entered the Oregon territory over the southern route through the famous Cow creek canyon.

During Mr. Curry's regime as editor printers were changed, John Fleming retiring in favor of N. W. Colwell, who came to Oregon in 1845. Later Mr. Fleming returned as printer, but not until Editor Curry had quit the editorship of the Spectator because of the political censorship which existed. Mr. Curry resigned early in 1848 and in March of the same year established an opposition paper, which was named the Oregon Free Press. Publication of this paper stopped in October, 1848, principally due to the rush of people to the gold mines in California.

On February 8, 1848, Aaron E. Wait, a native of Massachusetts, became editor. On September 7 of this year the paper suspended publication because of the departure of Printer Fleming to the gold mines. Publication was resumed on October 12, with S. Bentley as printer, and the following terse apology:

"The Spectator, after a temporary sickness, greets its patrons and hopes to serve them faithfully and, as heretofore, regularly. That 'gold fever' which has swept about three thousand of the officers, lawyers, physicians, farmers and mechanics of Oregon from the plains of Oregon into the mines of California took away our printer also—hence the temporary non-appearance of the Spectator."

With the issue of February 22, 1849, Mr. Wait's connection with the paper ceased and soon after the paper again suspended publication. On October 4, 1849, it again appeared, with Rev. Wilson Blain, a United Presbyterian clergyman, as editor and George B. Goudy as printer. In April, 1850, Robert Moore, the proprietor of Linn City, opposite Oregon City and now known as West Linn, became owner of the paper, retaining Editor Blain. In November of this year Editor Blain moved to Union Point, Linn county, and established a church, being installed pastor in 1853.

He was succeeded by D. J. Schnebly, who changed the Spectator from a semi-monthly publication to a weekly. In the following year Mr. Schnebly became owner of the paper and installed C. P. Culver as associate editor. It was in 1852 that the paper became the champion of the Whig cause, but a year following the publication was suspended until August 19, 1853, when it resumed publication. After this date the paper did not receive good support and grew weaker and weaker, finally being sold by Mr. Schnebly to C. L. Goodrich in 1854, who operated it until March, 1855, when the first paper established on the Pacific coast was permanently suspended.

HISTORIAN HIMES WAS PRINTER'S DEVIL ON FIRST LEWIS PAPER

John Miller Murphy, who established the first newspaper, The Washington Standard, in the now State of Washington, went from Oregon City to Olympia for that purpose. Historian George H. Himes was his printer's devil. That which now comprises the State of Washington was at one time Lewis county, Oregon. Thus the land embraced in Washington State was at one time a part of Lewis county. The first newspaper published in Lewis county as now constituted was established in 1883 by Albert Tozier, later the seventeenth president of the National Editorial Association. His paper was the Nugget, which is still published at Chehalis.

Some years ago, King Edward, when taking a summer holiday at Marienbad received in twenty days over 300 presents from persons unknown to him. The gifts included many articles of jewelry—from studs to gold watches—cigars and cigarettes, and an assortment of other articles—from gloves, ties and canes to candy and scented soap. These gifts were never accepted, but were returned to the sender with a polite note signed by his Majesty's secretary.

CRATER LAKE VISIT WITH EDITORS ENJOYED BY OREGON CITY PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Brodie and son, George, returned Wednesday morning from Crater Lake, where they accompanied the members of the National Editorial Association party on the special train that left Portland Sunday. The party went to Medford by train and motored to the Lake Monday, returning to Ashland for dinner Tuesday night.

Governor and Mrs. Olcott, Mayor and Mrs. Baker, of Portland, C. E. Ingalls, of Corvallis, president of the Oregon State Editorial Association and Mrs. Ingalls, S. C. Morton, of St. Helens, president of the Oregon Newspaper Conference, and Mrs. Morton, W. J. Hofmann, advertising manager of The Oregonian and chairman of the Oregon reception and entertainment committee, and Mrs. Hofmann, were among the Oregon people who went with the party as hosts, and the Eastern editors were thrilled over the wonders of Crater Lake and the Rogue River country. The people of Medford, Ashland and Grants Pass cooperated in the entertainment of the party, composed of 265 people from 37 states, the largest delegations coming from Minnesota and Illinois.

LOWER HOUSE WANTS SPECIAL SESSION STATE LEGISLATURE

SALEM, Aug. 7.—With the receipt by the governor's office this morning of the petition containing the names of 19 members of the Multnomah delegation, asking that a special ratification session of the legislature be called, the list of volunteers in the lower house has now reached 33, or two more than the majority stipulated by Governor Olcott as one of the conditions upon which he would issue the call. The list of senators yet lacks two names of a majority, with a total of 14 signifying their willingness to attend the session.

Girls in New Guinea have little chance to run away. Their parents force them to sleep in a little house on the topmost branches of a tall tree; then the ladder is removed, and the slumber of the parents is not disturbed by fears of an elopement.

State Secretary Of Editorial Assn. Recently Re-elected

Lloyd Riches, secretary of the Oregon State Editorial Association, left Wednesday evening for Seattle, where he will be a guest of the Washington

Press association during the session of the National Editorial Association in Seattle. Mr. Riches was re-elected secretary of the Oregon State Editorial Association at the meeting held in Portland last week.

ROAD COMMISSION PURCHASES NEW HOLT TRACTOR AND LEVELER

Under the supervision of H. G. Compton, county road master, much work is being accomplished on the roads centering in Oregon City. The capacity of the paving plant has been increased about 15 per cent. New machinery has been installed by the county, among this being a 75-horse power Holt caterpillar tractor to be used in the grading of the roads. This is expected to take the place of about 30 teams and 25 men, and it is also expected to use this in repairing old macadamized roads or for heavy grading. A land leveler has also been purchased, with a capacity of five cubic yards at one load.

The new machinery has arrived, here, and the work of assembling will be started this week. The work of improving the roadway along the Clackamas river front will be the first roadway to be improved this week. This roadway leads along the Clackamas water front, and is one of the most picturesque roads in the county. A portion of this was improved some time ago. At the present time there is much travel along this road, but owing to the condition of the road on the west side of the O. W. P. track many prefer to travel through the Main Street of Gladstone in order to escape the bad roadway.

The next roadway to be improved after the road at Gladstone is repaired is that leading from Mount Pleasant road to the Mountain View road and known as the Holmes road. This passes along the front of the old historic home of William Holmes, and where the first legislative session in Oregon was held. William Harris, one of the county commissioners, stated today that an effort has been made since the year of 1846 to improve this roadway, without success.

Mr. Compton and the county court, consisting of Judge H. S. Anderson, county judge, W. A. Proctor and Wm. Harris, commissioners, are much encouraged over the work that is being done on the roads undergoing improvement. Up to the first of the month the average pavement accomplished has been 300 feet per day.

With the motoring season now at its height, the roads that have been repaired and open to travel are greatly appreciated by the motorists.

PROGRESS REPORTED IN FIGHT ON HIGH COSTS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—From all parts of the United States come reports of progress in the people's fight against the rising cost of living. In this battle local and federal agencies are co-operating.

While this battle goes on all over the land, congress is busy digesting President Wilson's recommendations for reduction of increasing prices. Prompt action by congress was promised today on those of the president's recommendations which did not affect profoundly the policies of the government, as phrased by Republican Leader Mondell, Wyoming, republican leader in the house.

Teaching swimming strokes by the use of motion pictures is a new idea that has come into practical use. Expert swimmers are photographed in action, and after studying the strokes the pupils imitate them until the teacher is satisfied. Then the motions are practiced in water.

YOUNG MAN KILLED IN RUNAWAY NEAR SANDY

John DeYoung, living at Damascus, near Clackamas, was instantly killed Monday evening near Sandy when a team which he was driving ran away and upset a load of lumber to which they were hitched.

Mr. DeYoung had made the trip to Sandy with another young man after two loads of lumber for a farmer living near Damascus who had recently lost a barn which had been struck by lightning, and the young men had volunteered their services and the use of their teams in an effort to assist the unfortunate neighbor.

Employees at the Brun mill at Sandy, where the young men loaded the lumber, stated that the team driven by DeYoung was very fractious and attempted to run away while in the yard.

After driving out of the yard with his load and proceeding about a quarter of a mile down the road the team apparently ran away, and in attempting to stop them by running up onto the grade at the side of the road the wagon struck a large log lying parallel to the road and overturned, the lumber dislodging and falling on top of DeYoung, breaking his neck and back.

Dr. Williams of Sandy was called to the scene within a few minutes after the accident happened but life was extinct. The body was taken to the Carson undertaking parlors at Gresham after the arrival of Coroner Johnson from Oregon City and the holding of an inquiry which showed conclusively that death was due to accidental causes.

John DeYoung was well and favorably known in the Damascus district and his father, Garrett DeYoung, is one of the well known farmers of that district. He was 26 years of age and was married. The fatal accident occurred about five o'clock Monday afternoon.

TWO CONVICTS MAKE SPECTACULAR DASH FOR LIBERTY AT SALEM

SALEM, Aug. 13.—B. C. Brichoux and Edward Southwick, two state prison inmates, one of them a life term but both temporarily committed to the state hospital for the insane, made their escape this morning by jumping from a truck in which they, together with a number of other hospital inmates, were being taken to the state prison flax fields.

Hospital attendants saw the two men enter a passing automobile a few minutes after jumping from the truck and are convinced that a sister of Southwick, who has been here for a month in an effort to effect his release, is implicated in the plot to escape.

Brichoux was committed to the state prison for murder from Malheur county, October 13, 1916, under a life sentence. He was transferred to the state hospital on April 19, 1917.

Southwick was committed to the state prison from Walla Walla county on March 12, 1919, for larceny and assault with intent to kill, with a maximum sentence of 20 years. He was transferred to the state hospital on April 17.
