Portland, Aug. 15.—The fire which last night destroyed the plant of the Northwest Box Manufacturing company at the foot of Lincoln street, cost the life of Fireman Francis McCormick and wrought damage to the approximate amount of $35,000.

Captain W. F. Roberts, deputy fire marshal, said this morning that the fire marshal's force had not the slightest idea of how the fire started.

The fire was discovered at 7 o'clock by Watchman John Carlson. By the time the first apparatus reached the scene the whole plant was a raging inferno and the flames had spread on a stiff breeze into the yard of the Portland Lumber company. Acting Chief Heath immediately sent in a second and third alarm which were responded to by nine engine companies, three truck companies, one chemical and both fireboats. The firemen laid their attack along a trestle and other lines were laid from the fireboats in the river. The blaze was so hot that it was impossible to get close to it, and the trestle soon gave way.

The firemen who were on it made a scramble for safety. Hoseman McCormick was caught on the burning trestle, but it was after he had reached the unburned portion of the viaduct, directly over the S. P. tracks, that he fell, striking on his head. Firemen who saw the man fall could not say whether he slipped or was struck by a hose line. The fall of 25 feet fractured his skull and he died at Good Samaritan hospital at 1:45 this morning.
