SWEETER THAN HONEY IS MONEY MADE BY BEES

WINNIPEG, Man.—"Sweeter than honey or the honeycomb" is the money that the busy bee is pouring into the pockets of apiculturists in these days of sugar shortage throughout the world.

Never was such a demand for honey as now. All the nations of Europe are clamoring for it. The war wrought havoc among the hives overseas. Quebec produced 4,000,000 pounds of honey last year. Manitoba's output of 5,451,400 pounds annually, this year, according to J. H. Evans, superintendent of agriculture, exceeds the highest previous record of the United States hasn't enough honey to go round.

Canada learned its lesson from the war. Thousands of farmers took up bee keeping. Their wives and daughters became enthusiastic apiculturists. Bee culture with its fine profits is an business eminently adapted to women. Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have long been noted honey producers. The western provinces are now their rivals. Prairie wild flowers are rich fields for the bees. The blooms of alfalfa, now an extensive crop in western Canada, produce the best quality of honey.

Canada's honey crop last year approximated 8,000,000 pounds. This year's crop, it is estimated, will be larger. The war wrought havoc among the hives overseas.
