

AFTERMATH OF STORM BRINGS HUMOROUS INCIDENTS TO FRONT

City Wags Get Busy and Cut Up Didos for Amusement Sake

Great banks of snow are piled in heaps along Main street, making traveling somewhat difficult for pedestrians. Many amusing sights have been witnessed since the snow is on the ground. Fronting the barber shop of G. F. Anderson is a mound of snow about six feet high with the sign bearing the following wording: "Who said this was Oregon?" while on the rear side in large letters reading "Mount Hood." This has attracted much attention of those passing that way. With the six feet taken from the sidewalk, cleared the way for the people passing the shop. The mound was built by Ralph F. Anderson, son of G. F. Anderson, who recently arrived from California.

Fronting the O. K. barber shop of E. L. Johnson, are signs bearing the words "Keep Off the Grass." In front of Depot barber shop is a sign on a snow bank almost as high as the shop itself. It reads: "No Parking Here." C. E. Overton, who arrived in Oregon City this fall with his family and four children, coming from Missouri by automobile, are finding that Oregon can compare with some parts of Missouri when it comes to a snow storm. As he is from Missouri and said he had to be shown, he is being shown pretty well now, for he is making his home in a tent at Willamette, but these are not cold and uncomfortable. There are four large army tents, three of which are being used in housing the family, well heated by stoves and most comfortably fitted up. The fourth tent is being used as a garage and wood shed, and not even a tiny speck of snow has made its entrance in these tents. The family is perfectly contented and are enjoying the out-of-door life in Oregon's worst snow storm. Mr. Overton, who is an experienced barber, having recently taken a position with the G. F. Anderson barber shop, is looking after the comfort of his family in the tents at the present time, and expects to resume his position within a few days. The tents are pitched in the Kinney grove near the home of Mr. Overton's parents at Willamette.

Miss Martha Krueger, one of the faithful employees of the Morning Enterprise, a stenographer by occupation, was one who had experience in reaching her place of employment Wednesday morning that she will not soon forget. After attiring herself in a pair of trousers, she headed for the Enterprise office, wading knee deep in places through the snow. Before evening, realizing the weather would make the return trip somewhat dangerous, she accepted the invitation to stay at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Brodie, until the weather moderates. Miss Krueger's home is at Clackamas heights, and very little travel had been made when making the trip Wednesday morning. In places the walk is out, making the road dangerous.

Arthur C. Howland, one of the prominent real estate dealers, was asked by an Enterprise reporter how real estate was selling, and replied, "Well, I have some very 'valuable' pieces of property I would like to sell during this weather. One is a tract of land consisting of over 100 acres with rocks and stumps that is now practically level—with the snow." Miss Marie Friedrichs, who attempted to get through the snow on Wednesday morning to make her way to her place of employment in the office of County Clerk Fred Miller, and becoming discouraged when she struck snow up to her waist and returned to her home, was at her desk Thursday morning, having braved the snow again, and reached the depot in safety, but the road is still covered with snow, with very little travel in that direction.

Miss Jessie Paddock is still "snowed in" at her home at Gladstone, but expects to be at her duties today. Miss Alice McKinnon, who was unable to make the trip to Oregon City Wednesday, was again resuming her duties with County Judge Anderson's office Thursday, but shortly after leaving her home she suffered from a severe fall at the Gladstone depot. Brave men rushed to her side, but she was again on her feet before they arrived, having been somewhat used to falling since the snow started to fall Monday night.

Mrs. Drizwell, who, with her family, have taken up their residence for the winter at the home of Mrs. Babcock, of Twelfth and Washington streets, is enjoying her first coasting in Oregon. Mrs. Drizwell arrived here a few weeks ago with her husband and two attractive little daughters from Tennessee, and this is the first snow they have seen for some time. Attired in her husband's khaki uniform, she is comfortably clothed to coast down the steep grade of Eleventh street, and with her rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes, says, "I certainly enjoy coasting in Oregon; it's a treat that I have not enjoyed here before." The children are just as happy over the coasting as their mother, and with their sleds can be seen sliding down the hill, at various times during the day. Running into the snow drifts does not worry them, for they merely shake off the snow and start over again. They have been the means of cleaning the sidewalk of much of the snow fallen there, so they can continue their good work and their pleasure combined.

Thomas M. Miller, bailiff of the circuit court, and a resident of Oregon City for 69 years, said on Thursday that this storm was now experiencing is the worst he has ever seen during that time.

Joseph Denner, one of the well known contractors of this city, who has been a resident of Clackamas county for about 40 years, says: "The storm we had this week is the worst that I have ever experienced since coming west."

"T. D. Taylor, tax collector in the court house, who has always boasted for Clackamas county, says 'I have resided here for 30 years, and this is the worst ever.'"

Other residents having resided here are surprised at the actions of the weather man, and some are fearing for the rest to come, with more snow and more cold weather.

Henry Streibig, whose home is at Gladstone, decided that it was better to remain in Oregon City Tuesday evening instead of facing the storm and going to his home, but Wednesday morning he changed his mind. After vainly trying to secure a room in the city, he made up his mind he would make a "bunk" at the rear of his meat market on Sixth and Main streets. His faithful old dog "Jack," a handsome yellow collie, also remained for the night at the meat market. It was just about 2 o'clock when Henry's clock reminded him it was nearing morning. Believing that it would be preferable to sit by the warm fire than lying on the hard floor, he called to his dog and said, "Jack, come here and take my bunk." The dog rushed to his side and settled himself down on the bunk contented. Streibig went to a nearby restaurant where he remained until 6 o'clock. He then started in to dig snow for the remainder of the morning, clearing the snow away from his place of business. Streibig says it was the worst night he ever experienced.

Sheriff W. J. Wilson is another citizen who had troubles of his own also. Remaining at his post of duty until after 11 o'clock, he started for his home, and no sooner had he hit the top of the stairs of the court house than he hit the bottom step, for the stairs were like a sheet of glass, and the stone stairs were unusually hard when Billy's head came in contact with each one, but he had his big smile on Wednesday morning when he made his appearance at the office, and told the court house officials that it was the worst night he too, had experienced since arriving in Oregon City. Even the good natured janitor of the court house, J. W. Jones, known as "Jonsie," who has worked diligently from the starting of the snow on Monday night until late Wednesday evening. Great snow banks, as a result of Jonsie's efforts are shown at the court house gate, and employees of the paper mill were overheard to say, "This looks like some one has been doing some work here."

Death of Another Pioneer Recorded

Mrs. Mary Putrow, widow of the late A. D. Putrow, one of the most prominent and well known women of Oregon City, died at her home at the corner of Eleventh and Washington streets Wednesday morning about 5 o'clock.

Mrs. Putrow attended the morning service at the Congregational church, of which she had been a member for many years, last Sunday. The following day she was taken with a severe cold and on Wednesday night it terminated in pneumonia. Her death came as a great shock to her family and many friends in this city.

Mrs. Putrow was the daughter of the late Zeba and Cynthia Davis, early pioneers of Massachusetts. She was born at Dudley, Mass., March 8, 1836, and at the time of her death was 83 years of age. On April 11, 1854, she married A. D. Putrow, and from Dudley, Mass., moved to Providence, R. I., where she resided for some time until starting for Oregon. She arrived in Oregon City September 30, 1872. Since that time she has resided here.

Many years ago she became a member of the Congregational church of this city, and since that time has taken an active interest in the church. She was one of the oldest members of the Ladies' Aid society of the Congregational church.

Mrs. Putrow was loved by hundreds of people of this city, being of a kind and cheerful disposition. Mrs. E. G. Caulfield, a daughter, residing in this city, survives her. Mr. Putrow died in this city on April 30, 1914, and her only son, William Putrow, died October 29, 1914, in this city. The remains will be removed to Sellwood and placed in a mausoleum the remains of the husband and son to be removed later and placed beside Mrs. Putrow. The remains are at the family home at Eleventh and Washington streets.

The funeral will be held from the family residence at 11th and Washington streets on Sunday at 2 o'clock. The Rev. Herbert G. Crocker will officiate.

FRENCH TRY TO BE FAIR

PARIS, Dec. 13.—"Men have the inalienable right to feast their eyes upon the feminine beauties of all nations."

Such was the reply today of the fashionable Epantat club to the protest against the display of English prize beauties at the Marigny theater yesterday evening, when French women rose in indignation and cried: "Aren't there enough beautiful women in France?"

How Much Legislation?

If the state legislature, at the special session next January should, in advance of the opening of the session, agree, through its leaders, on a definite program that would be consummated in two or three days, then the solons would have done all the public could fairly ask them to do, for the people who are not yearning for a prolonged session. It appears that the legislature should speedily ratify the federal women's suffrage amendment and enact such amendments to the workmen's compensation law and the irrigation laws that are equitable and necessary, and then adjourn.

We fear, however, that there will be the usual clamor for 57 varieties of legislation, freakish and otherwise, and that legislators and lobbyists may forget the specific purposes for which the extraordinary session was called, and if the bars are let down, though they should not be, we suggest the following legislation for proper consideration:

Requiring the publication of delinquent tax lists, in the interest of the general taxpaying public.

Increasing the rate for legal publications to 10 cents per line, in the interest of better newspapers, which are groaning under heavy operating costs.

Adequate legislation to combat the I. W. W. and kindred evils.

The submission of all county division and annexation questions to the people directly interested.

The submission at the next election of an amendment to the constitution providing for a lieutenant-governor.

Heavy increase in the license on motor trucks, and restriction upon the loads they shall carry on public highways.

Requiring the publication of returns of primary elections in the official Blue Book of the state.

Abolishment of the state election pamphlets, and the substitution of newspapers, following the Minnesota law.

Repeal of the dead-letter laws that are on the statute books, and that are not enforced, such as the law requiring the Governor to call a special election to fill vacancies in the legislature.

Of course, there are many others. These are only a few, but if the legislature is going to run wild, why not go the limit and let's have a good old-fashioned session, with yards of talk and inches of action. Most of us are prohibited from doing any work at home this kind of weather, anyway.

Four Feet of Snow at Bend

Mrs. Mae Russell of this city, has received the following telegram from her daughter, Mrs. Charles Parker, formerly of this city and recently leaving here for Terrebonne, Oregon, near Bend:

"No cause for alarm. We are very comfortably situated and are having a good time. No mail service at present, but trains are now running. We have about four feet of snow, with the thermometer 20 degrees below zero. Well and happy."

The telegram arrived here Saturday morning, and the anxious mother has been relieved by receiving it.

Auto Usurps Road Horse Takes Snow

Does a horse always have to give the road to an automobile? This has been a question of Wednesday's storm and it was proven on that day that the automobile has full sway. There was but a narrow stretch of road cleared for traffic Wednesday afternoon when a sleigh attached to a horse and an automobile going in opposite directions met on the street. After much puzzling of both drivers it was decided to let the automobile pass. The sleigh was picked up by a number of stalwart men, who happened to be passing in that direction, and placed at the side of the cleared way, the horse gladly giving way to the automobile, and both proceeded on their way. The snow, which had been banked from the cleared walk, was about three feet deep into which the horse was driven.

Wonderful Centre College Player Kicking Forty-sixth Goal for Undeclared Team

Football dope was never more upset than this season and little Centre college had a lot to do with jumbling up the situation. Centre college, located at Danville, Ky., has only about 225 students but out of that small number picked up an eleven which went through the season without defeat. The team whipped the great West Virginia eleven, which had beaten Princeton, Ohio, Wesleyan and Rutgers by large scores. The Centre college boys gave Indiana a bad beating and Indiana soon afterward beat Syracuse. One of the principal factors in the college's wonderful showing was Weaver, the 150-pound center. He kicked 46 goals and missed only one during the season. This photograph shows him preparing to send the ball between the goal posts for the forty-sixth time.

Indited U. S. Senator, Judge Before Whom He Appeared, and Special Prosecutor

Here are three prominent figures in the fraud case which grew out of the Ford-Newberry senatorial election in Michigan in 1918. Truman H. Newberry, now sitting in the senate, is one of 135 indicted by a federal grand jury on charges of corruption, fraud and conspiracy. His opponent was Henry Ford, whose attorneys have taken an active part in the gathering of evidence. The men indicted are being arraigned before Judge C. W. Sessions and the prosecution will be in the hands of Special Assistant Attorney General Dailey.

BREAD WAGON FROM PORTLAND IS FIRST CAR THROUGH ROAD

Portland Firm Sends Out Car That Arrives After Seven Hour Battle With Drifts

The first automobile to arrive from Portland since the terrible storm of Tuesday was an Oldsmobile owned by the New York bakery of Portland in charge of J. M. Harris and Ben Wade, two young men employed by the bakery, Thursday.

These young men bringing a load of bread from the Portland firm, started to this city, expecting to have troubles of their own before reaching their destination. They came well equipped with shovels, and luckily they did, for the shovels were a God send before they arrived at Milwaukie.

It was necessary to shovel their way through the drifts and deep snow almost the entire distance. In places the snow was at least three feet deep. Following close behind were two delivery automobiles of other bakeries of Portland.

These drivers gave their assistance in order to get their deliveries through, each taking turns at digging away the big drifts. After Jennings Lodge had been reached the drivers of the two machines at the rear gave up in despair and made their return to Portland. The Oldsmobile proceeded to this city, arriving here about 5 o'clock.

The men left Portland at 10 a. m. and after arriving here they were about "all in" and had not definitely decided whether they would attempt the return trip Thursday evening or not.

When the men arrived at the Doolittle & Cheney store, which firm handles the bread, Cheney exclaimed: "God bless you boys, we are surprised you got here, and how did you make it?" The boys explained, "We made it with our shovels, and it was one of the hardest jobs we ever tackled." Deliveries were made while en route.

FIRE PANIC IS AVERTED

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—Sixteen hundred people calmly filed out of Lyceum theater last night while a fire raged in the gallery. A stampede threatened when a negro shouted out a warning, but a United States sailor and the manager of the theater, Jack Garbison, jumped to their feet and urged the audience to file out calmly. After the last person had left the theater the flames shot through the roof and high into the air and only the efforts of the firemen saved the entire building from ruin.

The fire occurred during a wrestling match which followed the regular performance. Damage is estimated at $75,000.

The Lyceum theater is one of the most historic old theaters here. Five presidents have held their inaugural ball here.

TOSON ARRESTED AND FINED

B. I. Toson, 25 years of age, was arrested Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock by Chief of Police Woodward on a charge of carrying concealed weapons.

He was taken in custody in the Woolworth store and within an hour had been tried and convicted before Police Judge John W. Loder. He was fined $25. The fine was paid and he was released. Toson is employed in a local paper mill.

He was carrying a revolver in his pocket when arrested.

STEAMERS ARE SOLD BUT WILL BE RUN UNDER ONE COMPANY

River Boats Plying Between Oregon City and Portland are Sold to One Company

The Willamette Navigation company have bought all the boats of the Western Transportation company, and now operates a fleet of eight river steamers, the largest number ever operated by a single company in the river, it was announced Tuesday.

The river steamers bought from the Western Transportation & Towing company are the Oklahama, Georgia Burton, Annie Comings and Ione. Vessels previously owned by the Willamette Navigation company are the steamers Claire, Ruth and N. R. Lang. The river steamer Nespelem, bought down from the Snake river two years ago by the Porter brothers, is operated under charter by the Willamette Navigation company.

Both companies concerned in the transaction are controlled by the Crown Willamette Paper company, and the boats are used chiefly in serving the paper mills at Oregon City and Canas, though they operate under the regulation of the interstate commerce commission and also serve way landings. Boats serving the Oregon City mill customarily stop at the Oswego cement plant and carry general freight between Oregon City and Portland, and those serving the Canas mill stop at Vancouver.

Offices of the Willamette Navigation company at Oregon City were given up Tuesday and this fact led to the disclosure of the big deal in river steamers. The company moved into the former offices of the Western Transportation & Towing company in the Pittcock block, which have been given up by the latter company. The understanding is that the Western Transportation & Towing company has gone out of business.

Officers of the company are: A. J. Lewthwaite, president; B. T. McBain, vice president; A. L. Bloch, second vice president; William McKay, secretary, and Captain R. J. Young, manager.

The acquisition of the steamers Oklahama, Georgia Burton, Annie Comings and Ione by the Willamette Navigation company was made effective December 1, but not disclosed until Tuesday.
