

The Value of Truth

TRUTH in business is just as important as truthfulness in everyday life; truth creates confidence, establishes good will and builds a reliability that will not be wrecked by the storms of competition.

The people of this community learned long ago that every word of our advertising was the truth and that every article bought at this store represented a true value.

This accounts for our large patronage and the growth of the business.

If you are not already one of our patrons we believe it will pay you to investigate.

The Colonel's Convalescence

By ALAN HINSDALE

In one of those battles between the French and Germans when the latter were endeavoring to reach the channel Colonel Latrobe, a man of forty, was wounded and instead of being sent to a hospital was left for want of transportation at a chateau by the way. The lady who owned the place directed that he be placed in one of her best rooms and at once assumed his care. Fortunately for both, the fighting did not come near the chateau, and the colonel was left to recover, his wants being supplied by the lady, a spinster named Remercier.

Mlle. Remercier was some five years younger than Latrobe, and spinsters usually preserve their youthful appearance longer than their married sisters. At any rate this is liable to be the case with unmarried women who have no cares or troubles. The colonel's nurse was still a handsome woman.

There was a long period of convalescence, during which the colonel was unable to join his command. Mlle. Remercier read to him, chatted with him, fed him, indeed made his convalescence delightful. Every morning she gathered flowers from her garden, carried them to his room and arranged them in a vase of Dresden china with her own hands. Many of the delicacies prepared for him to eat she cooked with her own hands. No matter what time of day he called for anything he needed the lady responded and always with a sympathetic smile.

In time Latrobe spent a portion of the day in an easy chair, then he walked all the day there; then he was able to walk about his room and finally to go downstairs. He was chafing to get back to the front, though loath to leave his luxurious abode and especially his fair hostess.

One morning in June he was sitting on the terrace with Mlle. Remercier. The sun shone brightly, and delicious perfume came from the roses growing beside the terrace. Conversation turned upon the school of St. Cyr, from which the colonel had been graduated a subaltern into the army.

"I visited St. Cyr when but seventeen years old," said Mlle. Remercier. "I can conceive of no place so soothrilling to a girl of that age as a military academy. The young men in uniform are far more respectful than those in civilian dress. There are the martial music, the military ceremonies, everything to turn a girl's head."

"And I remember," added the colonel, "how we youngsters delighted in making love to the girls who visited St. Cyr. Lovemaking had not the meaning that it has for older men. It was what the Americans call flirting. We thought nothing of telling a girl we loved her, and the girls thought nothing of pretending to reciprocate. We enjoyed the sentiment without having to fret about the responsibilities. When we had made love to one girl we were ready for another. And when they had gone we returned to our studies as free mentally as before they had come."

"Your picture may be true with respect to the young men," said the lady, "and in most cases perhaps with regard to the girls. In my case it was different. In one of these young military students I met that which was the most serious episode of my life. He made love to me simply for the temporary enjoyment of the sentiment. Alas, it was far more than that to me! That is why I have never married."

"The brute!" exclaimed the colonel. "No; he was simply young and did not realize the danger to me of what was done."

"Perhaps he did realize it in time, to his cost. I confess that there was one of my affairs that stood by me for many years. I could not shake it off. Even today, after twenty years, I see in my dreams that young face and press again that soft hand."

"And why did you, after discovering that you really loved her, not seek her out?"

"Ah, that would have served in America, where they marry for love, but not in France, where parents arrange marriages for their children."

"Who was the girl?"

"If I remember correctly she was the daughter of a gentleman of fortune, living in one of the provinces. Her name was Hortense"—he was stilled; he had forgotten her surname.

"Would you know her again, do you suppose, after not seeing her for twenty years?"

"That I could not say."

Mlle. Remercier arose and went into the house. Presently she returned with a miniature painting, which she handed to the colonel. He looked at it for a few moments as though it brought back some vague memory; then suddenly he turned his eyes upon his companion in a sort of wonder.

"Where did you get this?" he asked.

"I have had it ever since the original visited St. Cyr twenty years ago."

The colonel's steady gaze gradually revealed to him that the miniature was a likeness of Mlle. Remercier at seventeen.

"Hortense!" he exclaimed.

"Henri!" was the low reply.

When the colonel went back to the front he returned a married man. He did not have returned. He was very much pleased at receiving another wound, just severe enough to lay him up for a month. He returned to the chateau of his wife, and the month of recovery and his honeymoon were one and the same thing.

A REAL COINCIDENCE

Men of Same Name Secure License at Same Time. Marry Teachers

There are many places where one might look for illustrations of the term coincidence, but one of the last places it would be expected to be found would be in the marriage market. But a real coincidence was brought to light in County Clerk Harrington's office on Wednesday morning when two unrelated gentlemen of the same name and ages appeared at the same time, although not together, to secure licenses to marry school teachers of the same age.

Clifford P. Crawford of Oregon City greeted Miss Harrington first and a license was speedily prepared while Samuel D. Crawford, a young farmer from near Salem waited patiently. Clifford Crawford is listed for matrimonial affiliations with Miss Nora H. Hanon of Milwaukie, and a school teacher. The groom is twenty-six years old and the bride is twenty-four.

Samuel D. Crawford came to Oregon City from his farm near Salem to claim in marriage Miss Grace Zinser, school teacher and daughter of Prof. Zinser, well-known as an instructor in the Oregon City schools a few years ago. Mr. Crawford number 2 is twenty-six years of age and Miss Zinser is twenty-four.

Inquisitive onlookers in the county clerk's office discovered that the young men were unacquainted and had arrived for the same purpose at the same time without the knowledge of one another.

WILL RETAIN JOBS

Mr. Hawley Announces Magnanimous Policy to Employes

The spirit of patriotism is finding expression just now in many different ways, but that displayed by W. P. Hawley, president of the Hawley Pulp & Paper company is notable for its magnanimity. Mr. Hawley announced publicly on Tuesday that any of his employes who were members of the guard or who would become members to go to the border in case the troops are ordered from their post at Clackamas would be reinstated in the positions which they sacrificed to do their duty with the guard.

Mr. Hawley's patriotic zeal is thereby known to be as great as the civic patriotism that has inspired his worthy support of practically every enterprise that has been undertaken in this city or county in years. His support of the action of his employes in enlisting for service on the border is in line with what federal and national guard officials have been trying to accomplish with large employers for many years. Mr. Hawley realizes the fear a young man has of losing employment through allegiance to the flag and his announcement will be very important to a large number of young men who would otherwise be hesitant about enlisting. In each

GOODMAN SUES AGAIN

Transfers Property to Wife and Cannot Pay Judgment

F. E. Goodman, Gladstone councilman and merchant, got in bad when he alienated the affections of Mrs. B. F. Stark and Judge Campbell assessed him $1000 as damages to the husband of Mrs. Stark. But Mr. Goodman did not figure that the courts could collect $1000 if his property and finances were properly manipulated and just after Mr. Stark filed suit against him Goodman transferred his property to Mrs. Goodman.

At the time of his action Mr. Goodman did not understand that a statute in this state made such a transfer an admission of guilt as well as illegal and that the deeds on record are apt to be set aside as a result of the action instituted late last week by Mr. Stark.

At the present time Mr. Goodman has no property in his own name and he cannot, therefore, pay the judgment demanded from him unless the deeds transferring his property to Mrs. Goodman are set aside. Mr. Goodman is named with her husband as defendant in the suit filed by George C. Brownell and Charles T. Sievers, who represented Mr. Stark in the previous action.
