

DEAD DOG CAUSES BITTER WARFARE BETWEEN PAPERS

COURIER AND JOURNAL LOCKED IN COMBAT WHICH DRAGS OFFICIALS IN, TOO.

BOUNTY MISTAKENLY PAID ON CANINE FOR WOLF IS CAUSE

Charges and Counter Charges Fly in Bitter Battle That Tangles Game Wardens and County Clerk.

Bitter warfare appears to have broken out between the Oregon City Courier and the Oregon Daily Journal. Incidentally County Clerk Iva Harrington and State Game Warden L. P. Finley are involved in the conflict.

It appears that early this year Oliver A. Giltner, of Estacada, killed an animal in the wilderness at the eastern side of the county. He brought the beast in, and County Clerk Harrington opined that it was a wolf, and on March 11 gave Giltner $5 bounty thereon. Subsequently Game Warden A. G. Ames killed a wolf seven feet long, and also brought that in, and received bounty. Then both hunters decided to get the state bounty too, and sent their pelts to Salem.

The state officials paid Ames his bounty, but told Giltner that his "wolf" was a dog. News of this reached County Clerk Harrington, and he requested Giltner to refund the bounty he had received. On April 14 Giltner wrote Miss Harrington that he had sent the pelt of his animal to Washington, D. C., for the opinion of government experts, and said that if they declared it to be other than a wolf, he would refund the bounty money.

About this time the Courier heard of the incident, and got the names twisted and accused Ames of having palmed off a dead dog on the county for a wolf, and suggested that it would be well for all concerned to explain. Ames wandered in to the Courier and demanded that he be set right before the world; and Miss Harrington told State Game Warden Finley.

At this time of the game the Oregon Daily Journal, through its local correspondent, got into the game and championed Miss Harrington. So Monday the Journal published an article saying that State Game Warden Finley denied the statement * * * that state authorities had paid bounty on a dog, and that "the attack against Clerk Harrington was unwarranted." Incidentally Washington experts have pronounced the Giltner "wolf" to be a dog, and Giltner has not, as yet, returned the county bounty.

The largest statue in the world is being carved in a Japanese quarry. The image will be 240 feet from head to foot, and larger than the Sphinx in Egypt.

Notice of Final Account.

In the County Court of the State of Oregon, for Clackamas County. In the Matter of the Estate of Andreas Anton Mayer, Deceased. Notice is hereby given that the undersigned as Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Andreas Anton Mayer, deceased, has filed with the clerk of the above entitled court her final account of her administration of said estate and that said court has appointed Monday, the 14th day of June, A. D. 1915, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon of said day in the court room of said court in the City of Oregon City, County of Clackamas, State of Oregon, as the time and place for the hearing of all objections, if any there be, to said final account and settlement thereof.

EMMA VICTORIA MAYER, Executrix of the last Will and Testament of Andreas Anton Mayer, deceased.

FRED J. MEINDL, Attorney for Executrix.

They are 70 Years Old.

"For some time past my wife and myself were troubled with kidney trouble," writes T. B. Carpenter, Harrisburg, Pa. "We suffered rheumatic pains all through the body. The first few doses of Foley Kidney Pills relieved us. After taking five bottles between us we are entirely cured. Although we are both in the seventies we are as vigorous as we were thirty years ago." Foley Kidney Pills stop sleep disturbing bladder weakness, backache, rheumatism, dizziness, swollen joints and sore muscles. Jones Drug Co. (Adv.)

JENNINGS LODGE.

The Grace Congregational church holds Sunday school at 9:45 each Sunday. Preaching follows at 11 A. M. The pastor, H. N. Smith, preached on the morning of May 9th. His theme being part of Mark 9:19. The choir rendering special music. Mrs. Langdon Spooner and Messrs. Ostrom and Robinson sang "Behold, I Knock," which was particularly impressive. The church was beautifully decorated with Scotch broom and Madam Alfred Carrier roses with silver poplar. Children's day will be observed the first Sunday in June. The children at home being on the program of songs and recitations.

The budget for the finances of the church, which amounts to $450, has been nearly raised.

The Boy Scouts, with their leader visited the Gym at the Congregational church in Oregon City on Friday evening last.

Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Bess Bruchert and Rev. and Mrs. Smith attended the regular council meeting of the Federated churches in Oregon City on Tuesday evening last.

Mrs. Alice A. Smith was appointed missionary superintendent of Grace church.

The BLACK BOX

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

Author of "Mr. Grey of Monte Carlo," "The Vanished Messenger," "The Lighted Way," etc.

Novelized from the motion picture drama of the same name produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Illustrated with photographs from the motion picture production.

(Copyright, 1914, by Otto F. Wood.)

SYNOPSIS.

Ranford Quest, master criminologist of the world, finds that in bringing to justice Macdonald, the murderer of Lord Ashleigh's daughter, he has but just begun a life-and-death struggle with a mysterious master criminal. In a hidden room in Professor Ashleigh's garden he has been an antelope-like animal, and a living human creature, half monkey, half man, destroyed by fire. In his room have appeared from nowhere black boxes containing diamonds that had been torn from the owner's throat by a pair of armless, threatening hands and "sarcasm, threatening notes signed by the inscrutable hands. Laura and Lenora, his assistants, suspect Quest, the professor's valet, of the double murder of Ross Brown, Quest's valet, and a Miss Quigg. Quest traps Craig, but he escapes to England on a tramp steamer. The black boxes continue to appear in uncanny fashion. Notified of Craig's recapture by Scotland Yard men Quest and the professor go to Hamble house, Lord Ashleigh's home in England, only to find that Craig has again escaped.

NINTH INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER XX.

LOST IN LONDON.

Quest, notwithstanding the unusual nature of his surroundings, slept that night as only a tired and healthy man can. He was awakened the next morning by the quiet movements of a man-servant who had brought back his clothes carefully brushed and pressed.

"Breakfast is served at nine o'clock, sir. It is now half-past eight."

"I'll be right there."

The man withdrew and Quest made a brisk toilet. The nameless fears of the previous night had altogether disappeared. At the last moment he stretched out his hand to take a handkerchief from his satchel. A sudden exclamation broke from his lips. He stood for a moment as though turned to stone. Before him, on the top of the little pile of white cambric, was a small black box! With a movement of the fingers which was almost mechanical, he removed the lid and drew out the customary little scrap of paper. He smoothed it out before him on the dressing case and read the message:

"You will fall here as you have failed before. Better go back. There is more danger for you in this country than you dream of."

His teeth came fiercely together and his hands were clenched. His thoughts had gone like a flash to Lenora. Was it possible that harm was intended for her? He put the idea away from him almost as soon as conceived. The thing was unimaginable. Craig was here, must be here, in the close vicinity of the house.

The atmosphere of the pleasant breakfast room to which in due course he descended, was cheerful enough. Lady Ashleigh had already taken her place at the head of the table.

She touched an electric bell under her foot and a moment or two later the butler appeared.

"Go up and see how long your master will be?" Lady Ashleigh directed.

"Very good, your ladyship."

The man was backing through the doorway in his usual dignified manner when he was suddenly pushed on one side. The valet who had waited upon Quest, and who was Lord Ashleigh's own servant, rushed into the room. He almost shouted to Lady Ashleigh:

"Your ladyship—the master! Something has happened! He won't move! He—he—"

They all trooped out of the room and up the stairs, the professor leading the way. They pushed open the door of Lord Ashleigh's bedroom. In the far corner of the large room was the four-poster, and underneath the clothes a silent figure. The professor turned down the sheets. There he held out his hand. His face, too, was blanched.

"Julia, don't come," he begged.

"I must know," she almost shrieked.

"I must know!"

"George is dead," the professor said slowly.

There was a moment's awful silence, broken by a piercing scream from Lady Ashleigh. She sank down upon the sofa, and the professor leaned over her. Quest turned to the little group of frightened servants who were gathered round the doorway.

"Telephone for a doctor," he ordered; "also to the local police station."

"He, too, approached the bed and reverently lifted the covering. Lord Ashleigh was lying there, his body a little doubled up, his arms wide outstretched. On his throat were two black marks.

They had led Lady Ashleigh from the room. The professor and Quest stood face to face. The former's expression, however, had lost all his amiable serenity. His face was white and pinched.

"Quest! Quest!" he almost sobbed.

"My brother!—George, whom I loved like nobody else on earth! Is he really dead?"

"Absolutely!"

The professor gripped the oak pillar of the bedstead. He seemed on the point of collapse.

"The mark of the Hands is upon his throat," Quest pointed out.

"The Hands! Oh, my God!" the professor groaned.

The Sunday school picnic of the federated schools will be held about the middle of June.

We regret very much to learn that the C. C. Michener family are soon to leave for Ogden, Utah, to make their home. Miss Mable Williams, who goes with this family will also be greatly missed from among us. They will leave about June 1st.

Harold A. Smith has been elected president of the student body of Reed College, where he is a junior. Harold is a major in chemistry and for two years has been an assistant in this

"We must not eat or drink or sleep," Quest declared, fiercely, "until we have brought this matter to an end. Craig must be found. This is the supreme horror of all."

The butler made an apologetic appearance. He spoke in a hushed whisper.

"You are wanted downstairs, gentlemen. Middleton, the head keeper, is there."

As though inspired with a common idea, both Quest and the professor hurried out of the room and down the broad stairs. Their inspiration was a true one. The gamekeeper well came them with a smile or triumph. By his side, the picture of abject misery, his clothes torn and muddy, was Craig!

"I've imagined this little job, sir," Middleton announced, with a smile of slow triumph.

"How did you get him?" Quest demanded.

"Little idea of my own," the gamekeeper continued. "I guessed pretty well what he'd be up to. He'd tumbled to it that the usual way of the moor was pretty well guarded, and he'd doubled back through the thin line of woods close to the house. I dug one of my poachers' pits, sir, and covered it over with a lot of loose stuff. That got him all right. When I went to look this morning I saw where he'd fallen through, and there he was, walking round and round at the bottom like a caged animal. Your servants have telephoned for the police, Mr. Ashleigh."

Quest suddenly whispered to the professor. Then he turned to the keeper.

"Bring him upstairs, Middleton, for a moment," he directed. "Follow us, please."

They passed into the bedroom. Quest signed to the keeper to bring Craig to the side of the four-poster. Then he drew down the sheet.

"Is that your work?" he asked, sternly.

Craig, up till then, had spoken no word. He had shambled to the bedside, a broken, yet, in a sense, a stolid figure. The sight of the dead man, however, seemed to galvanize him into sudden and awful vitality. He threw up his arms. His eyes were horrible as they glared at these small black marks. His lips moved backwards and forwards, helplessly at first. Then at last he spoke.

"Strangled!" he cried. "One more!"

"That is your work," the criminologist said, firmly.

Craig collapsed. He would have fallen bodily to the ground if Middleton's grip had not kept him up. Quest bent over him. It was clear that he had fainted. They led him from the room.

"We'd better lock him up until the police arrive," Quest suggested. "I suppose there is a safe place somewhere?"

The professor awoke from his stupor.

"Let me show you," he begged. "I know the way. We've a subterranean hiding place which no criminal on this earth could escape from."

They led him down to the back part of the house into a dry cellar which had the appearance of a prison cell.

"This place has been used before now, in the old days, for malefactors," the professor remarked. "He'll be safe there. Craig—he added, his voice trembling, "Craig—I can't speak to you. How could you!"

There was no answer. Craig's face was buried in his hands. They left him there and turned the key.

CHAPTER XXI.

Quest stood, frowning, upon the pavement, gazing at the obviously empty house. He looked once more at the slip of paper which Lenora had given him. There was no possibility of any mistake:

Mrs. Willet, 157 Elmwood Road, Hampstead.

This was 157 and the house was empty. After a moment's hesitation he rang the bell at the adjoining door. A woman, who had been watching him from the front room, answered the summons at once.

"Can you tell me," he inquired, "what has become of the lady who used to live at 157—Mrs. Willet?"

"She's moved," was the uncompromising reply.

"Do you know where to?" Quest asked, eagerly.

"West Kensington—No. 17 Princess Court road. There was a young lady here yesterday afternoon inquiring for her."

Quest raised his hat. It was a relief, at any rate, to have news of Lenora.

"I am very much obliged to you, madam."

"You're welcome!" was the terse reply.

Quest gave a new address to the taxi driver and was scarcely able to restrain his impatience during the long drive. They pulled up at last before a somewhat dingy-looking house. He rang the bell, which was answered by a trim-looking little maid-servant.

"Is Mrs. Willet in?" he inquired.

The maid-servant stood on one side to let him pass. Almost at the same moment the door of the front room opened and a pleasant-looking elderly lady appeared.

"I am Mrs. Willet," she announced. "I am Mr. Quest," the criminologist told her quickly. "You may have heard your niece, Lenora, speak of me."

"Then perhaps you can tell me what has become of her?" Mrs. Willet observed.

"Isn't she here?"

Mrs. Willet shook her head.

"I had a telegram from her from Plymouth to say that she was coming, but I've seen nothing of her as yet."

"You've changed your address, you know," Quest reminded her, after a moment's reflection.

"I wrote and told her," Mrs. Willet began. "After all, though," she went on thoughtfully, "I am not sure whether she could have had the letter. But if she went up to Hampstead, anyone would tell her where I had moved to. There's no secret about me."

"Lenora did go up to 157 Elmwood road yesterday," Quest told her. "They gave her your address here, as they have just given it to me."

"Then what's become of the child?" Mrs. Willet demanded.

Quest, whose brain was working quickly, scribbled upon one of his cards the address of the hotel where he had taken rooms and passed it over.

"Why Lenora didn't come on to you here I can't imagine," he said. "However, I'll go back to the hotel where she was to spend the night after she arrived. She may have gone back there. That's my address, Mrs. Willet. If you hear anything I wish you'd let me know. Lenora's quite a particular friend of mine and I am a little anxious."

Quest had already opened the front door for himself and passed out. He sprang into the taxi, which he had kept waiting.

"Clifford's hotel in Payne street," he told the man.

He lit a cigar and smoked furiously all the way, throwing it on to the pavement as he hurried into the quiet private hotel which a fellow passenger on the steamer had recommended as being suitable for Lenora's one night alone in town.

"Can you tell me if Miss Lenora Macdonald is staying here?" he asked at the office.

The woman shook her head.

"Miss Macdonald stayed here the night before last," she said, "and her luggage is waiting for orders. She left here yesterday afternoon to go to her aunt's, and promised to send for her things later on during the day. There they stand, all ready for her."

"What time did she go?"

"Directly after an early lunch. It must have been about two o'clock."

Quest hurried away. So after all there was some foundation for this queer sense of depression which had been hovering about him for the last few days!

"Scotland Yard," he told the taxi driver.

He thrust another cigar between his teeth, but forgot to light it. He was amazed at his own sensations, conscious of fears and emotions of which he would never have believed himself capable. He gave in his card, and after a few moments' delay he was shown into the presence of one of the chiefs of the detective department, who greeted him warmly.

"My name is Hardaway," the latter announced.

"My assistant, a young lady, Miss Lenora Macdonald, has disappeared! She and I and Professor Ashleigh left the steamer at Plymouth and traveled up in the boat train. It was stopped at Hambleton road for the professor and myself, and Miss Macdonald came on to London. She was staying at Clifford's hotel in Payne street for the night, and then going on to the aunt. Well, I've found that aunt. She was expecting the girl, but the girl never appeared."

"Where did this aunt live?" Hardaway inquired.

"No. 17, Princess Court road, West Kensington," Quest replied. "She had just moved there from Elmwood road, Hampstead. I went first to Hampstead. Lenora had been there and learned her aunt's correct address in West Kensington. I followed on to West Kensington and found that the aunt was still awaiting her."

He stopped the cab and they got out. A man who seemed to be strolling aimlessly along reading a newspaper suddenly joined them.

"Well, Dixon?" his chief exclaimed.

The man glanced around.

"I've got three men round at the back, Mr. Hardaway," he said. "It's impossible for anyone to leave the place."

Hardaway paused to consider a moment.

"Look here," Quest suggested, "they know all of you, of course, and they'll never let you in until they're forced to. I'm a stranger. Let me go. I'll get in all right."

"All right," he assented. "We shall follow you up pretty closely, though."

Quest stepped back into the taxi and gave the driver a direction. When he emerged in front of the handsome gray stone house he seemed to have become completely transformed. There was a fateful smile upon his lips. He crossed the pavement with difficulty, stumbling up the steps, and held on the knocker with one hand while he scoured a slip of paper. He had scarcely rung the bell before a slightly parted curtain in the front room fell together and a moment later the door was opened by a man in the livery of a butler, but with the face and physique of a prize-fighter.

"Lady of the house," Quest demanded. "Want to see the lady of the house?"

Almost immediately he was conscious of a woman standing in the hall before him.

"You had better come in," she invited. "Please do not stand in the doorway."

Quest, however, who had heard the footsteps of the others behind him, loitered there for a moment.

"You're the lady whose name is on this piece of paper?" he demanded. "This place is all right, eh?"

"I really do not know what you mean," the woman replied coldly; "but if you will come inside I will talk with you in the drawing room."

Quest, as though stumbling against the front door, had it now wide open, and in a moment the hall seemed full.

Mrs. Mable Pierce, Mr. Pomeroy arrived on Saturday and will leave for the Puget Sound cities on Wednesday. He had not met his sister for thirteen years.

For the pleasure of DeForest Pomeroy, H. T. Emmons and wife asked in a group of friends on Tuesday evening. Sprays of pink azaleas were used about the rooms. Cards were enjoyed and delicious refreshments were served to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pierce, Mr. DeForest Pomeroy, Geo. Morse, Messdames C. C. Michener and Wm. Greger, Miss Kaminski and Mr. and given by Harvey Cross, near the entrance of the chauntanga park at Gladstone.

Clyde Jones, of Portland, was a Sunday caller at the Lodge. Clyde is attending trades school in Portland this year.

Oscar Erickson gave a dancing party on Saturday evening at the hall. Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Redmond, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Card, Mr. and Mrs. Parks enjoying the evening with a large number of the younger set.

DeForest Pomeroy, of Minneapolis, is paying a short visit to his sister,

"I'll Give a Ten-Pound Note to Anyone Who Gets Me Out to the Barton Before She Sails."

A new interest seemed suddenly to have crept into Hardaway's manner.

"Let me see," he said, "if she left Clifford's hotel about two, she would have been at Hampstead about half-past two. She would waste a few minutes in making inquiries, then she probably left Hampstead for West Kensington, say, at a quarter to three. Give me at once a description of the young lady," he demanded.

Quest drew a photograph from his pocket and passed it silently over.

"Mr. Quest," he said, "it is just possible that your visit here has been an exceedingly opportune one."

"Come along with me," he continued. "We'll talk as we go."

They entered a taxi and drove off westwards.

"Mr. Quest," he went on, "for two months we have been on the track of a man and a woman whom we strongly suspect of having deceived half a dozen perfectly respectable young women and shipped them out to South America."

"The white slave traffic!" Quest gasped.

"Something of the sort," Hardaway admitted. "Well, we've been closing the net around this interesting couple, and last night I had information brought to me upon which we are acting this afternoon. We've had them watched and it seems that they were sitting in a tea place about three o'clock yesterday afternoon when a young woman entered who was obviously a stranger to London. You see, the time fits in exactly, if your assistant decided to stop on her way to Kensington and get some tea. She asked the woman at the desk the best means of getting to West Kensington without taking a taxi cab. Her description tallies exactly with the photograph you have shown me. The woman whom my men were watching addressed her and offered to show her the way. They left the place together. My men followed them. The house has been watched ever since and we are raiding it this afternoon. You and I will just be in time."

He stopped the cab and they got out. A man who seemed to be strolling aimlessly along reading a newspaper suddenly joined them.

"Well, Dixon?" his chief exclaimed.

The man glanced around.

"I've got three men round at the back, Mr. Hardaway," he said. "It's impossible for anyone to leave the place."

Hardaway paused to consider a moment.

"Look here," Quest suggested, "they know all of you, of course, and they'll never let you in until they're forced to. I'm a stranger. Let me go. I'll get in all right."

"All right," he assented. "We shall follow you up pretty closely, though."

Quest stepped back into the taxi and gave the driver a direction. When he emerged in front of the handsome gray stone house he seemed to have become completely transformed. There was a fateful smile upon his lips. He crossed the pavement with difficulty, stumbling up the steps, and held on the knocker with one hand while he scoured a slip of paper. He had scarcely rung the bell before a slightly parted curtain in the front room fell together and a moment later the door was opened by a man in the livery of a butler, but with the face and physique of a prize-fighter.

"Lady of the house," Quest demanded. "Want to see the lady of the house?"

Almost immediately he was conscious of a woman standing in the hall before him.

"You had better come in," she invited. "Please do not stand in the doorway."

Quest, however, who had heard the footsteps of the others behind him, loitered there for a moment.

"You're the lady whose name is on this piece of paper?" he demanded. "This place is all right, eh?"

"I really do not know what you mean," the woman replied coldly; "but if you will come inside I will talk with you in the drawing room."

Quest, as though stumbling against the front door, had it now wide open, and in a moment the hall seemed full.

Mrs. Mable Pierce, Mr. Pomeroy arrived on Saturday and will leave for the Puget Sound cities on Wednesday. He had not met his sister for thirteen years.

For the pleasure of DeForest Pomeroy, H. T. Emmons and wife asked in a group of friends on Tuesday evening. Sprays of pink azaleas were used about the rooms. Cards were enjoyed and delicious refreshments were served to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pierce, Mr. DeForest Pomeroy, Geo. Morse, Messdames C. C. Michener and Wm. Greger, Miss Kaminski and Mr. and given by Harvey Cross, near the entrance of the chauntanga park at Gladstone.

Clyde Jones, of Portland, was a Sunday caller at the Lodge. Clyde is attending trades school in Portland this year.

Oscar Erickson gave a dancing party on Saturday evening at the hall. Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Redmond, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Card, Mr. and Mrs. Parks enjoying the evening with a large number of the younger set.

DeForest Pomeroy, of