ETHICS, ECONOMY, DIPLOMACY, HONESTY, toleration and consideration spell success in life. Aman Moore, vice-president of the Oregon Portland Cement company at Oswego, in Clackamas county—a million dollar industry—seems to be shy on some of these things, judging by the strictures, even assaults, he has made upon public officials, John B. Yeon, S. Benson, Portland newspapers and others in high places and of influence. Why? Because, to all seeming, these public officials and publications have not chunked overboard all other paving material and agreed to use his exclusively.

That appears to be the burden of Mr. Moore's letter, recently transmitted to Robert G. Dieck, commissioner, department of public works, of Portland. Now, the company which has established the Oregon Portland Cement corporation at great cost to manufacture paying cement and other products deserves a large measure of consideration, public and private, and also has a right to expect a reasonable share of patronage, not only from Portland but also from other cities and counties, where its products can be used. That is, of course, all other things being equal.

Nor is there any one who is going to seek to rob the Oswego concern of its just need of business and prosperity. But the methods which Mr. Moore, as the spokesman and managing head of the company here, has resorted to, are hardly those which will appeal to the average business man. More are they the procedure of a martinet. His system is of the "big stick" sort, to compel by force rather than to convince by the merit of his goods, augmented by a spirit of toleration for those who may not accept him and his at the Moore-face value.

Of course, Mr. Moore has a right to run the business of the company as he sees fit and proper. He has, we take, been placed at the head of this big concern, because of his ability and judgment and experience. These have evidently shaped his unusual campaign of harsh criticism and even spleen against those who have not fallen right in with him and accepted his paving material willy nilly. If he feels that he can win with such methods, then it is up to him and his company. It is their funeral.

Such ways have never proved overly successful in our experience. And we might rise up right here and give this testimony—that Mr. Moore will not be able to put over his goods in any such manner. The carper is generally a charlatan. Mr. Moore's first lesson to learn is that he is "not the only pebble on the beach." It is difficult for some to get this quaint and slang but apt philosophy well rooted in their heads. Either Mr. Moore has to master this little conceit or he is going to get a hard fall, sooner or later.

He is apparently going on the theory that since the company has put in $1,000,000 and more building a cement plant here that it is a strictly home concern and therefore the prime consideration is to buy all cement from it, irrespective of other things that enter into the proposition. We grant that all other things being equal, he is right in some measure, for civic pride and patriotism command us to some extent.

But ethics and particularly economy are also big elements and must be taken into consideration. Business is not sentiment. In this day and generation the man who has the cheapest-best is the winner, provided he combines with the merit of his goods, toleration for patrons of competitors, service and methods that persuade the latter and the public generally of the worth of his wares.

It seems to us that either Mr. Moore must mend his methods and repress his feelings or he must soon be a fit fish for "canning" by the Oregon Portland Cement company. Modern methods in business are altogether different from those of the old dispensation, when coercion figured so prominently.

What Mr. Moore should do is to go into executive session with himself before it is too late and spend several hours in introspection. If his ratiocinations do not then illuminate his mistakes and cause him to right about face, there is only one place for him—the limbo of failures. His ways now are not the ways of up-to-date business.

And in saying these things about the estimable gentleman, we are not prompted by malice. On the contrary, what has been said is in the greatest kindness. Sometimes a real jolt knocks the kinks out of an otherwise rational man. We see this illustrated in the reawakening by shock of one who has been suffering with amnesia—loss of memory, a sort of kink in the thinker.

THE PORTLAND OFFICE of the forest service has just issued the results of a preliminary statistical study to show the relation between the annual production of timber products and the consumption of such material within the states of Oregon and Washington. This study has brought out the fact that Washington consumes in her timber industries over six billion board feet or 82 per cent of her production, and 87 1-2 per cent of all the wood cut from her forests annually, while Oregon uses in her timber industries nearly three billion board feet or 27 1-2 per cent in excess of her log production and 16 per cent in excess of the wood cut from her forests each year. Owing to natural geographic conditions, she draws heavily on Washington for raw material for her mills and thereby conserves her own resources.

Washington consumes 17 1-2 per cent of her lumber production, or nearly eight hundred million feet. Of this amount, more than half is used for building purposes, about 7 per cent by the railroads, over one-third by the wood using industries, and a small percentage (.6 per cent) in mine work. Oregon consumes nearly 20 per cent of her lumber production, or over four hundred million board feet. Of this amount, more than half is used by the building trade, approximately 12 per cent by the railroads, 30 per cent by the wood using industries, and a small fraction (.2 per cent) in mine work.

When it comes to a per capita use of wood, the residents of Washington actually consume in the form of timber products within the state 225 cubic feet per capita annually, as compared with 100 cubic feet per capita for the entire United States, while Oregon uses 217 cubic feet per capita. Eighty-two per cent of Oregon's consumption and seventy per cent of Washington's consumption are for fuel purposes.

The report covers lumber, lath, shingles, fuel, cordwood, poles, piling, railroad and mine ties, and fence posts.

A LOT OF COLLEGE PROFESSORS are writing magazine articles in support of the theory that our industrial revival was not due to the war. But the theories of professors won't convince the bread liners who couldn't get jobs until war orders started our factories. The practical common sense of the farmer who sold grain and horses at high prices for shipment to Europe won't be overcome by opinions formed far from the marts of trade. Merchants who stood for months upon the horrifying brink of bankruptcy have more confidence in the facts shown by their ledgers than in the theories expounded in the books written by professors whose incomes depend very little upon the general industrial prosperity of the country. The American business man knows why our depression came and why it went.

The immense demand for ocean shipping due to the necessities of the nations at war, has raised transportation rates to such an extent that ships can now be sold for four times what they cost under normal conditions. If the United States should now appropriate money for the purchase of ships, the purchase price would, therefore, be four times the intrinsic value of the vessels. Immediately upon the close of the war, the abnormal demand for shipping would cease, shipping rates would return to normal standards and the market value of ships would be cut to one-fourth of their war-time figure. An investment of $50,000,000 in ships at the present time would leave the United States with a fleet valued at perhaps $12,000,000 when the war is over. Does any business man think that it would be good business policy for the United States to make an investment in ships just at this time?

Representative Hill, who wishes to see the dyestuffs industry built up in this country, predicts that under present conditions, if the war is long continued we shall be compelled to change the color of the national flag. If the red stripes of Old Glory are not replaced by yellow streaks, it will not be the fault of the present administration.

WITH THE DEFICIT WIPED OUT by the issuance of preferred stock and with some additional cash besides, the Willamette Valley Southern Thursday divorced itself from an incubus of debt and is now ready to enter upon a campaign that will mean not only prosperity to the railway company but also development of the country along the line.

One of the big things which the road will now take up in earnest is the establishment of a big sawmill at Mt. Angel. The people of that town are after the industry with vim and vigor. They have made liberal inducements to land it, and the indications are that they will succeed. Silverton is also trying to secure the prize. Mr. Angel, however, seems to have the edge right now.

The Willamette Valley Southern is using all of its influence to help Mr. Angel. The proposed plant there means the handling of thirty cars of lumber a day by the road. It also means other additional traffic, according to President Dimick of the line in a talk before the stockholders meeting of the road Thursday in Oregon City.

Betterments will be made to the road during the spring and an active and vigorous campaign will be made to colonize new people along the line. With a greater population, there naturally follows more traffic, both passenger and freight. By building and developing the country contiguous to the line, there logically comes commensurate prosperity.

IT HAS ALREADY BEEN POINTED OUT how Germany and her allies have been fighting their end of the European war on spuds.—common old Irish potatoes—which are grown in those countries and manufactured into many sorts of substantial foods and even alcohol to propel ships, autos and trucks and to manipulate heavy guns.

Now comes the statement, which seems to be backed up by exports, that the entente allies—England, France, Russia particularly—are doing their fighting in that great conflict with the Teutons, on the American hog. That is the Yankee pork seems to be furnishing the base of the rations for the allied armies. It is along this line that the department of commerce in a recent report indicates the American hog as the growing and big factor in the conduct of the European contest at arms. This report shows the exports of our other farm products have fallen off tremendously as compared with last year.

The shipments of breadstuffs the seven months ending January 31, were $67,000,000 less than in the same period of 1915. Most of this reduction was in wheat, of which we sold abroad 64,000,000 bushels less than in the seven months of the preceding year, and in January alone there was a loss of 11,000,000 bushels as compared with January, 1915. Flour has held up fairly well, although 700,000 barrels less than in the seven months of last year ending with January, but it brought about as much. Corn exports dropped one-third in January and corn meal about 40 per cent. Barley and rye also declined, but oats showed an increase of about 25 per cent.

A year ago at this time corned beef was in tremendous demand abroad. In January, 1915, we exported 7,746,000 pounds of corned beef. Last month we shipped but a little more than one million pounds. Not so great is the loss in fresh beef, although it dropped from 15,000,000 pounds in January, 1915, to 10,000,000 in the same month of this year.

Commenting on the report the St. Louis Globe-Democrat has this to say:

"But now observe the American hog. He seems to have taken possession of the foreign market. Whether he is one of the 'munitions of war' so much talked of we have no definite means of knowing, but the popularity and value of bacon as an army ration seems to indicate that he is taking an active part in the conflict. Our exports of bacon which amounted to 27,000,000 pounds in January, 1915, were 49,000,000 pounds in January, 1916, and in the seven months' period covered in the report, increased from 123,000,000 pounds last year to 319,000,000 pounds this year.

"Exports of hams and shoulders, which amounted to 76,000,000 pounds in the seven months January 31, 1915, were 145,000,000 pounds in the same period of 1915-16, and the shipments of fresh pork increased in the same period from 20,000,000 pounds to 67,000,000 pounds. Much has been said in past times of the 'American hog' abroad, but there was never anything to compare with this."

BIG ONES READY FOR IT

WILLARD AND MORAN MAGNET FOR FAN'S ATTENTION TILL MILL'S FOUGHT.

NEW YORK, March 22.—Jesse Willard and Frank Moran are ready for the going that will send them into a ten round slugfest at Madison Square Garden next Saturday night.

Both heavyweights indulged in only perfunctory training today. The work was calculated to keep them limber and on edge. Moran is much affected by the death of Trainer Lewis' little son, who he regarded as a mascot, and only boxed four rounds so as not to disappoint a crowd that had come to look him over. Willard reduced his work to a stroll around the block, but boxed six fast sessions.

The fans were rather wary of Moran's right, despite the hugeness of Willard. The terrific clouts he has dealt with that right slightly affected the betting which, however, has been very light. Observers figure that Willard will be content to keep away from Moran and outpoint him, while the challenger will swing constantly for a knockout. Unless Moran hangs the chloroform cloud on the champion's visage there is no chance of him grabbing the title.

Tex Rickard, promoter, is on velvet as far as the expenses are concerned. With many of the best seats unsold and all of the cheaper ones yet to go on sale, Rickard has already $150,000 in the old sock, and he believes the late sales will increase that sum to at least $150,000.

CONTROL OF W. V. S. RAILWAY IN OUTSIDE HANDS

which had been made by the directors with Mr. Abercrombie to secure the cash with which to complete the road. He holds five shares.

E. W. Smith, also Frank Jagger and J. J. Kleber, further envisioned what would have otherwise been a prosaic meeting by questions and arguments. W. H. Hunter, O. D. Eby, Grant Dimick straightened out the kinks and misapprehensions with reference to the deal as to the stock, old and new. They illuminated the transactions with the reasons therefor.

Gets Lion's Share. While the bargain driven by the directors with Mr. Abercrombie showed that the latter had received the lion's share, it was explained that he was in the position, at the time the arrangement was made, to exact it.

Mr. Oswald thought the overhead expenses of the road were too big and he further thought that if the president's salary were cut from $200 to $50 a month, the traffic manager's office abandoned and other cuts made the monthly expenses of the line would be reduced without interfering with the efficiency of the road's operation. However, Mr. Oswald seemed to be alone in his thoughts along this line, since no one appeared either to agree or disagree with him. He explained that his proposition had no personal animus hidden within it.

Among Those Present. Among some of the stockholders at the meeting were Oliver Robbins, S. M. Ramsey and George Gregory of Molalla, J. W. Elmer, J. J. Kleber, Joseph Walker and Emil Gage of Mt. Angel, S. R. Taylor of Monitor, E. W. Hornshuck of Homedale, Frederick Kaurat and W. T. Harrison of Beaver Creek, Charles H. Abercrombie of Portland, and also M. H. Clark, Portland attorney, representing the Swift estate.

Others there from Oregon City and vicinity were G. B. Dimick, O. D. Eby, George Randall, Mrs. Frederick M. Swift, L. N. Waldron, C. M. Baker, George A. Harding, J. E. Jack, Frank Busch, Frank L. Durfee, W. W. Everhart, B. Frederick, A. J. Corbett, W. H. Hunter, Olaf Oswald, A. W. Gillis, Frank Jagger, E. W. Smith, F. A. Miles and others.

KYLE IS CANDIDATE FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

MAYOR OF STANFELD AND PROMINENT IN EASTERN OREGON THROWS HAT IN RING.

James M. Kyle, mayor of Stanfield, Umatilla county, Oregon, has announced himself as a candidate for the office of public service commissioner, for the eastern Oregon district, comprising the counties east of the Cascade mountains. Mr. Kyle has resided in Umatilla county for a number of years and is prominently identified with the farming and fruit growing interests in the neighborhood of Stanfield.

He has been mayor of the city of Stanfield for several successive terms. The slogan of Mr. Kyle is "Encourage Capital; Regulate; Should It Become Oppressive." This is one of the most comprehensive and progressive slogans of the campaign. The state of Oregon, and the eastern part particularly, always has been and now is suffering for the want of capital to develop its manifold resources, particularly in the line of irrigation and railway construction.

Heretofore there has been too much of a tendency in Oregon to antagonize money, especially such as has been invested in corporations of various kinds. Mr. Kyle is in favor of inviting money to come here for all legitimate enterprises, but at the same time stands ready to properly regulate the same under the law, should it in any manner become oppressive.

The general co-operation of all interests along the line advocated by Mr. Kyle will lead to great development in this state, and he is entitled to the thanks of the people for being a pioneer in announcing a broad gauged policy such as this.

☞We are keeping pace with the development of Oregon City and Clackamas County. But we are not progressive at the expense of safety.

☞Caution marks our every forward step, and conservatism is always our watchword.
