MONEY CAUSES TROUBLE

Family Ties Torn When Money Crowds the Bank Books.

When money figures into the scheme of human life there is too often serious trouble as a result. Witness the case of Captain and Mrs. W. S. Tyler, which will be aired in the circuit court here soon. Captain Tyler, probably 60 years old, has filed suit in Judge Campbell's court asking a divorce from the woman who was once the maid of his fondest dreams and highest hopes.

Following the filing of the divorce complaint here by the husband, Mrs. Tyler entered an action in the circuit courts of Multnomah county, charging Mrs. Pamela Tyler, 84-year-old mother of Capt. Tyler, with the alienation of Capt. Tyler's affection. Those affections were worth $200,000 to the younger Mrs. Tyler, herself a woman of about 60 years. That is the amount she seeks to recover from the aged mother of the captain.

The elder Mrs. Tyler came into a fortune estimated at $250,000 following the death of her brother, a Mr. Barber, Chicago millionaire. No sooner was the money safely in hand, the younger Mrs. Tyler alleges, than family troubles started. Her complaint against her mother-in-law says that with the coming of fortune the older woman started a course of cruel treatment, seeking to humiliate her daughter-in-law and belittle her in the eyes of her husband. She charges that this plan was so successful that Captain Tyler no longer holds affection for her, as is evidenced by his suit for divorce. Prior to the receipt of the quarter-million dollars from the will of Mr. Barber, the Tyler family had been in comparatively poor circumstances.

OFFICIALS ASSUME DUTIES

Three New Officers Appear in County Court House This Week

On Tuesday morning Oregon City greeted three new county officials in the persons of W. A. Proctor, commissioner; Dudley C. Boyles, recorder; and W. W. Everhart, assessor. Mr. Boyles was for a year previous to his election chief deputy in the office of Recorder E. P. Dedman. His chief deputy is J. G. Noe, of Killin precinct. Mr. Everhart is mayor of Molalla, the council at that place having refused to accept his resignation recently. The chief deputy with Mr. Everhart is W. B. Cook of Oswego.

The retiring county employees are W. H. Mattoon, commissioner; J. E. Jack, assessor; E. P. Dedman, recorder; and George F. Johnson, chief deputy assessor. Mr. Dedman will go to his farm at Clackamas and will probably resume the active management of this valuable property. Mr. Jack has made no definite plans as yet, but expects to enter the mercantile business, from which he retired eight years ago when elected assessor. Both new officials are republicans, while Mr. Jack and Mr. Johnson, retiring from the assessor's office, are the only democrats who had space in the court house.

WHY SUFFER SO?

Why suffer from a bad back, from sharp, shooting twinges, headaches, dizziness and distressing urinary ills? Oregon City people recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Could you ask for stronger proof of merit?

Mrs. J. L. Pace, 712 Twelfth St., Oregon City, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills have been used with the best of results in our home and I feel perfectly free to recommend them."

The above statement was given April 4, 1913, and on April 17, 1916, Mrs. Pace added: "Whenever I feel in need of a kidney medicine, I take Doan's Kidney Pills and they never fail to do me good."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Pace has twice publicly recommended. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Long Inactivity

What was perhaps one of the longest periods of time in recent history of the circuit court of this county during which no actions were filed, ended on Tuesday morning. No action or suit had been entered upon the court register since Thursday, December 28, five days passing, including a Sunday and a holiday.

A Collapsible Method

By SADIE OLCOTT

Summer is the time for outdoor sports, winter the time for indoor games. Yes, they are games—not sports—the best that can be done to pass the time when we are housed. Yet they may serve another purpose.

Phillips and I were in the library. We had fixed a table for pingpong, called by some parlor tennis. The name is an asperser on the real tennis, which is one of the finest games played. Phillips was at one end of the table batting a little celluloid ball with a tiny wooden racket, I at the other doing the same thing.

"Forty love," said Phil on making a point.

"What did you call me?" I asked.

"I didn't call you anything."

"You said forty something. It didn't sound like Bob, but you may have intended it for Bob."

"Dear me, how you do hear things! You'd better get an ear trumpet."

She won the game, and we proceeded to the next. I had gained nothing by my attempt to introduce a love scrimmage and had given her a love game. We each made the same number of points and Phil cried:

"Deuce!"

"That's like a girl," I said. "One moment you call me love and the next devil."

"I've called you neither!"

She made a point and said, "Vantage!"

"It's all advantage with a girl," I remarked. "She can call a fellow 'love' and mean it, whereas if the fellow does any spooning he's held to a strict accountability."

"That's only when he's a desirable part!"

She enforced the words with a ball that hit me in the face.

"I have made no such pretense." Whether it was the sting of her words or of the miserable little globe, there was some asperity in my disclaimer.

"Who accused you of making a pretense?"

Though I was endeavoring to turn the subject from the game to something very near my heart, I could not seriously accuse her, so I made no reply.

"That's the end of the set," she said.

"Shall we play another?"

"I'd much rather sit by the fire."

She tossed her racket on the table and, going to the fireplace, stood before it, rubbing her hands as if they were cold. They were not, as I soon learned. She knew what was coming, and it rattled her a bit. Rather, I should say, she hoped for what was coming. I had worked up to the declaration point a number of times and stuck there. It's one thing to tell a girl you love her when she has been struck by lightning and falls into your arms in a critical condition; it is quite another to do the deed in cold blood.

At any rate, my efforts had all been failures.

"Why did you intimate," I asked, going to her and leaning against the mantel over the fireplace, "that I am not a desirable part?"

"I didn't."

Stuck again.

I looked through the window at the snow piling up in drifts. If one finds a task difficult under certain circumstances he thinks it would be easier under other circumstances. I was in a comfortable room with a cheerful open fire before me, but I thought I could get out what I wanted to say out in the snow.

"Let's go out and snowball," I said. She looked disappointed, but acceded to my request. She donned a warm jacket and a woven hood, and we sallied forth.

"You stand there," I said. "I'll stand here. You throw the first ball at me."

How I was to make a proposal while pelting her I didn't know. I hoped something would turn up to help me. It did, but Phillips turned it up; I didn't.

Phil made a snowball and threw it at me. I dodged it. I threw one at Phil. It went wide of the mark. She hit me on the chin. Something—perhaps it was the sting—put an extra amount of force into my arm as I threw the next ball. I couldn't see that it had hit her, but she put her hands to her eye and sank down on the cold snow with a moan. I ran to her.

"Phillips, dear! Sweetheart! Forgive me! I am a beast to have hurt you!"

I pulled away her hands, and she looked at me with inexpressible sweetness. I kissed the wounded eye.

Now, that eye should have been either inflamed or cold or snow wet. It was neither. A few bits of snow were on her shoulder. The snowball I had thrown was squashed against the fence directly behind her.

"Phillips, dear, let us go back to the library."

I supported her into the house, and we stood again before the fire.

"Oh, Phillips!" I exclaimed. "Suppose I had darkened that dear eye forever!"

She shuddered.

"If I had I should have devoted my life to you. Would you have let me?"

"Yes, Bob."

I drew the sofa before the fire, removed her wrap, and we sat down to the happiest hour of my life. The deed was done.

There should be a school for maidens who are troubled with balky lovers. They should be instructed to collapse, and collapsible methods should be given them.

Mrs. Wiseman Wants Divorce

Mrs. Alveda Wiseman asks to be divorced from Benjamin F. Wiseman in a complaint filed in Circuit Judge J. U. Campbell's court on Tuesday. Mrs. Wiseman charges her husband with cruelty and asks that her maiden name, Mrs. Alveda Anderson, be restored to her. From the first marriage Mrs. Wiseman has two grown sons. The Wisemans were married at Beaver City, Neb., on December 17, 1906.

ON COUNTY DIVISION

Mr. Warnock Says Oswego Wants Communications from County Seat

Oswego, Ore., Dec. 30, 1916.

Editor Courier:

I was interested in an article in last week's issue of the Oregon City Courier regarding the needs of Oswego and proposed methods of the Live Wires of that city in heading off the move for withdrawing from Clackamas county.

It would seem from their action that all Oswego wants is a road, and that with contemplated work under way, people here will regard that as sufficient.

This district has tried for a long time to get some means of communication with the county seat, without the necessity of having to travel to Portland first, travelling 28 miles to accomplish this, and has made every effort to get either railway connections or a jitney service.

Not long ago I was talking the matter over with a business man of that place, who should be big enough to know that there is a big trade area here to develop if Oregon City would only go part way, but he advanced the argument that he had noticed passengers boarding the jitneys, from in front of the Oregon City stores, and going to Portland to make purchases.

Well, if people are determined to purchase in Portland they will do so, jitney or no jitney, and if stores cannot meet the Portland prices with the fares on top of them, why then, they, too, had better go to Portland.

Even with a hard surface road we are still up against the old difficulty of reaching the place, and if the citizens there are alive to their interests, they will provide some means of bringing more of the people to Oregon City instead of exercising their ingenuity to keep out trade which is knocking at their doors. It is the old mossback idea of protection which does not protect, and works a hardship not only on people there, but on Oswego as well.

There is some talk of a franchise having been granted to W. M. Foster to run a jitney, but with the conditions imposed on him in the way of a heavy license fee and $5000 bonds, it is impossible for him to run and realize any profit.

With Oregon City owned and controlled by the Portland Railway, Light & Power Co., working through its henchmen to keep out all kinds of competition, it is time indeed that the people took this matter in their own hands, and through the use of their ballots, chase to cover the scheming politicians and interests seeking to hinder natural growth and development of their home town and county.

Had there been any disposition to do this on the part of their council, Oswego would not now be asking to break away from a community which will not recognize it, and where there would be more of a disposition towards recognition, but would be working with and for Oregon City instead of against it.

HOG PRICES CLIMB

Cattle Received at Portland Yards This Week Was of Poor Grade

The continued light receipts of cattle Monday met a very keen demand and prices ruled a good 25 cents higher than last week, with a 50 cent advance on the best beef grades. One load of good steers brought $8.50 with another bunch at $8.35; fair to good kinds brought $7.50 to $8. All supplies were sold and weighed early, there not being enough to let each buyer get a load. Cow stuff also sold readily, although no strictly good ones were included in the day's trade. Best beef cows would no doubt bring $7 or better; fair cows brought around $6.50 to $6.75, with ordinary ones around $6. Only a few bulls were available, the best bringing $5.25 from feeders. Best heavy bolognas ranged from $4.25 to $4.75, with light kinds $3.50 to $4. Trading in feeders was limited.

Hog prices continued their upward climb Monday, again breaking all records for the winter packing season. There was but a moderate run of 2000 head, which was quickly bought up. Prices were 15 to 20 cents higher on all good kinds, while pigs were advanced another 25 cents. The quality of the run was the best of the year. One load of prime heavies brought $10.25 with another load at $10.20. Bulk of good packing hogs sold from $9.95 to $10.10; pigs brought $8.50 to $8.75; stock hogs met a good demand with but a light supply. Best 80 to 125 pound pigs are selling from $7 to $7.25.

Sheep prices continued their upward climb, prices on all kinds being quoted 25 cents higher. Good lambs are selling at $10.50 to $10.75, with good east-of-the-mountains lambs at $11, good yearlings at $9 to $9.25 and good mutton ewes at $8 to $8.25. Supplies continue very light.

GLADSTONE WANTS WATER

Councilmen Appointed on Committees for the Work of the Year

The city council of Gladstone on Tuesday evening took up the work of the year at the regular monthly meeting and considered, in a preliminary way, several important matters. The Gladstone water system is being outgrown by the community and plans for its enlargement or replacement will be among the foremost considerations of the aldermen during the next few months. The present supply comes from a well on the banks of the Clackamas, being purified through soil filtration. The incorporation is bonded in the sum of $20,000 for the establishment of this system.

A committee comprising Councilmen Brenton Vedder, F. D. Barlow, Dr. W. E. Hempstead and Mayor T. C. Howell, was appointed to interview the board of water commissioners of Oregon City, following discussion by the mayor and others, with a view to making some connection with Mayor Howell delivered his annual message to the council, and its salient points were so important that they were put into the hands of several committees for action. Treasurer T. A. Burke and Recorder J. N. Sievers read their annual reports. The former showed a balance on hand of approximately $2400, after paying the final $1000 installment on the cost of the city's five-acre gravel pit at Parkplace.

The city's four new councilmen, H. E. Cross, Brenton Vedder, Dr. W. E. Hempstead and F. T. Barlow, attended their first meeting officially. Mr. Cross was elected president of the council. Mayor Howell appointed Thomas Gault as superintendent of the water system, to succeed Will Johnson, and H. C. Wagner to succeed E. Harrington as street superintendent. Permanent committees for the year, as appointed by Mayor Howell, are: finance, H. E. Cross, C. W. Parrish and F. E. Goodman; fire and water, Brenton Vedder, F. T. Barlow and Dr. Hempstead; streets and public property, Barlow, Parrish and Cross; health and police, Hempstead, Goodman and Vedder.

McBAIN ENTERTAINS

B. T. McBain, manager of the Crown-Willamette paper mills at West Linn, was host on Saturday evening at the company's annual banquet to 22 foremen and department heads. The festive board was spread down the center of Mass' restaurant and the guests made merry with a fine feast and serious and humorous discussion.

Most of the foremen, as well as Mr. McBain, spoke briefly at the banquet. Only two foremen or department heads were absent from the table. One of these was detained by a bereavement and the other, Maurice T. Hedden, chemical engineer at the mills, because he "had taken unto himself a wife," as he expressed it in a message read at the meeting. Mr. Hedden and Mrs. Meta Finley Thayer surprised their many friends on Saturday, when Mr. Hedden was supposed to have gone to Lebanon to visit the paper mill, by being married.
