DAIRY AND CREAMERY

tion and do not give room for a broad udder.

Tail.—The tail should be level in its attachment to the spinal column, small at this junction, and the bone should extend to the hocks. It should be thin throughout and the switch long and fine.

Escutcheon.—The escutcheon or "milk mirror" is the region above the udder between the thighs, where the hair grows in a different direction.

Hind Legs.—The legs should be evenly and squarely placed on the body. The bones of the legs should be clean and close in texture. The joints should be ample in size to form lever-ages for the actions of the muscles, but they should be free from growths of any nature, either fleshy or cartilaginous. When the hocks are set farther back than the rear of the body they are described as sickle hocks.

The Mammary System.—The mammary system is composed of the udder, teats, mammary or milk veins, and wells.

The Udder.—The udder should be large, wide and have a long attachment to the body of the cow. In shape it should be somewhat rounding, with the lower part, floor or sole of the udder as level as possible. The development should be symmetrical to make the quarters even in size. The more common defects in the udder are short attachment in front and low attachment behind, lack of width, sagging or pendulousness, a lack of uniform development and fleshiness.

Probably poor fore udders are as common as any other defect. Lack of development in this region causes a short udder attachment to the cow's body and very frequently accompanies a pendulous udder.

Pendulous udders indicate a short body attachment and a weakness of the muscular tissue which holds the udder to the body. Such udders are liable to be bruised by swinging when the animal walks or runs and also are in danger of being stepped on by the cow when she rises.

Three kinds of tissue go to make a cow's udder—namely, glandular, muscular and fleshy. The first kind is the secreting tissue that produces the milk, and the more there is of it the better. The function of muscular tissue is to support the udder and insure its firm attachment to the body.

Fleshy tissue is undesirable in the udder, and its presence indicates lack of quality and producing ability. Glandular tissue has a springy, elastic feeling, and an udder in which this predominates collapses to a great extent when empty. On the other hand, when fleshy tissue composes a large portion of the udder the latter is firm and does not collapse when empty. Considerable skill is necessary to determine the kind of tissue in the udder by the feeling. The safer way is to have the cow milked dry and then judge the character of the udder.

Teats.—The teats should be of convenient size for milking and should be evenly and squarely placed at the center of each quarter, so that the bottom will be in a horizontal plane and the distance equal between teats. They should be free from bunches, either internal or external, and the sphincter muscles at the bottom of the teats should be rigid enough to prevent the leaking of milk, but not stiff enough to cause difficult milking.

Mammary or Milk Veins and Wells.

The mammary veins are on each side of the belly, extending from the udder forward toward the shoulders. They should be large, long, branching and tortuous and should enter the abdomen well toward the shoulders. After that portion of the blood required for milk production is taken away the remaining portion returns to the heart through these veins. A large vein indicates that a great quantity of blood is being returned to the heart and that consequently much blood passed into the udder and was available for producing milk. In the heaviest milkers these veins are very crooked and often branching, in some cases entering the abdomen through several openings on each side. The milk well, or the opening through which the vein enters the abdomen, should be large and well forward.

Cows Need Water in Abundance.

All animals require plenty of good, pure water. This is especially true of the milking cow, as water constitutes more than three-fourths of the total volume of milk. The water supply therefore demands the dairyman's most careful attention.

DAIRY WISDOM.

Comfort is the keynote to success. No cow can be comfortable if half starved and cold.

Supply sufficient food in the stables to keep up the milk flow and condition.

Wash the cow's udder before milking and keep 94 per cent of dirt out of the milk that usually gets in otherwise.

It is the well cared for herd that returns the greatest profit.

For enduring profit the skim milk should be fed on the farm.

CONTRACT IS LET

Grace, Rasmussen to Have Charge of Building Big Woolen Mill Addition

Concrete work and general construction is included in the contract awarded to Grace, Rasmussen & company on Saturday for the erection of the new addition to the Oregon City Manufacturing company's plant here. The contractors are the same who built the Mill A addition to the Hawley Pulp & Paper company mills last summer and fall.

A. R. Jacobs, president of the woolen mill company, did not make public the amount of the bid which won the big contract for Grace, Rasmussen & company, but he announced the intention of starting actual work within a week. There are several minor contracts yet to be let, and the company will await bids on the several classes of work.

The new mill is to be a three-story reinforced concrete structure, extending along Third street west to the river, thence along the river front. It will be equipped with the most modern woolen mill machinery and factory equipment, and its outstanding feature will be the up-to-date ventilating and lighting plan. Cafeterias for employees and rest and reading rooms will be equipped. The location of the addition will make it possible for the company to take direct advantage of both rail and water shipping facilities and the added structure will give sufficient space for workrooms to permit the company to make use of the present mill building for store rooms, shipping rooms, stock display rooms and for other purposes.

HOBART WINS SUIT

District 27 Cannot Improve Roads With Special Levy Funds

A permanent injunction was issued by Judge Campbell on Tuesday to restrain County Clerk Harrington from entering on the county records the special 10-mill road tax levy voted recently in the Marquam neighborhood, road district 27. J. W. Hobart brought the suit against the county clerk on the strength of his allegation that the notices for the special election had not been properly posted.

The county filed a demurrer to the complaint, but this entry was overruled by Judge Campbell several days ago. His order signed on Tuesday declares the special levy illegal and void, and prevents the county clerk from entering the assessments on the tax rolls.

SHE ASKED FOR CANDOR.

And Now He Wonders What Would Have Happened Had She Got It. A woman with a birthday is eight spoke earnestly to three men who were her friends.

"Tomorrow will be another birthday for me," she said. "I know the freshness of my youth has departed, but I should like to know just how old I appear in the eyes of the world. Tell me, my dear friends, if you were looking on me for the first time what would be your impressions?"

Said the first man glibly: "I have known you for several years, and you appear the same as when I first saw you. Your beauty is undimmed; your charm is undiminished. If I did not know otherwise I should say tomorrow would be your twentieth birthday."

Said the second man more slowly: "I, too, have known you for several years, but it seems to me you have been favored by time. Your beauty has ripened and deepened until now you, who were once a lovely bud, are a lovelier rose in bloom. I should count tomorrow as the beginning of your twenty-fifth year."

"And you?" queried the woman of the third man, who had been regarding her with clear eyed frankness. "Between friends there should always be truth," he replied gravely. "I acknowledge your beauty and your charm, and both have been wonderfully preserved in a semblance of youth. But you ask for candor, and you shall have it. Looking at you closely, I should not expect you to see thirty—after tomorrow."

The woman faced the three men who were her friends, and her eyes were gleaming while her cheeks' pink turned to crimson. She pointed an accusing finger.

"You have lied," she said tremulously, "and you also. But I will forgive you both because you lied to please me. But you"—she whirled toward the last speaker—"you are a barbarous egotist. You have wounded me in order to maintain your own reputation for veracity. Truth, indeed! Your honesty offends me. We are no longer friends. Go—and quickly!"

"Whew!" exclaimed the third man as he strode through the outer darkness. "I wonder what would have happened to me if I had really told her the truth!"—Ella Randall Pearce in Life.

LIMBS AND THE MAN.

Lengths in Fingers, Hands and Arms, the Span and the Stride.

If the forefinger is bent so that each joint may be measured separately they will be in the proportion of 1, 1¼, 2 and the distance from knuckle to wrist four times the length of the first joint. If the finger is straightened out the distance from the wrist to finger tip will be seven inches, supposing the nail joint to be one inch. The span with thumb and forefinger will then be eight inches and an inch longer with any of the three other fingers. From wrist to elbow will be ten inches, from elbow to forefinger seventeen, and from collar bone to forefinger thirty-two.

Salvors extend the arms fully and call the distance a fathom, though a man standing with his back to a wall can stretch only about his height. If he tries to measure a tree by reaching around it his fathom will hardly be more than five feet.
