Resume of the News of the Week from All Parts of Oregon

Several months ago each load of hogs from the Willamette valley points was made up mostly of pigs and half-fat hogs. Today, with the big end of our receipts coming out of the valley, they are our best hogs. The stockmen are rapidly beginning to believe that there is money in feeding out their hogs even at the extreme high prices they could obtain for their grain. This improvement in the finish as well as the quality is surely gratifying to those who have been advocating this for so long a time. The quality of the hogs coming from the valley is at the majority are finished right up around 200 to 225 pounds. Very rarely are there any pigs included, the demand for pigs and stockers throughout the valley is so great from all feeders. The quality of the hogs, no doubt, is doing a lot toward putting prices at record breaking levels.—Livestock Reporter.

J. N. Hoffman, attorney and loganberry juice manufacturer, returned to Forest Grove from a six weeks' trip to the middle west and east, in interest of the loganberry business, and after a thorough investigation, J. N. says he is free to confess that he is less enthusiastic now than he was before he made the journey. "The farmers have enough acreage in loganberries to supply the present demand," says Mr. Hoffman, and he would not encourage further planting until the market is more widely developed. "What the loganberry business needs now is a big advertising campaign, which would cost a mint of money, to catch up with the grape juice people, who have already spent millions in printers' ink."—News-Times.

Mayores Laura Starcher and her coterie of women officials are to have an inaugural ball at Umatilla. The little Umatilla county town is to be the scene of the biggest social event of her history in years in February. Now that they have set the tongues of the entire county a-wagging by electing an entire women's administration they are bound that not only their administration affairs be carried out in a strict businesslike fashion, but that Umatilla's social activities shall be absolutely up to the minute.

McMinnville ranks twelfth among the 20 cities of Oregon having more than $1,000,000 bank deposits, according to figures compiled by S. G. Sargent, state superintendent of banks. McMinnville's bank deposits total $1,576,104.23, Portland's $89, 609, 467.03; Pendleton is second; Salem third; Astoria fourth; Eugene fifth; Baker sixth. All the banks of the state have deposits amounting to $164,596,980.74. According to figures compiled from the statements of the national banks of Yamhill county, an increase in deposits is shown in the six institutions ranging from a gain of 56 per cent down to 18 per cent during the period extending between Dec. 31, 1915, and Dec. 27, 1916. Both national banks at Newberg reveal an increase of deposits of 40 per cent. In McMinnville the gain in deposits of the three banks ranges from 56 per cent to 29 per cent.—News-Reporter.

Beginning with a banquet held at the Mount Hood hotel at Hood River, at which 30 members of the commercial club were present, the joint legislative committee of the commercial club and the Hood River valley grange, closed a stormy session after consideration of a number of house and senate bills upon which action was taken by the joint committee and upon which recommendations will be made to the Wasco and Hood River county senators and representatives. A bitter fight was waged over the federal aid bill, S. B. No. 14, and S. B. No. 61, dealing with the rights of aliens who have not the right to become United States citizens to hold lands in fee.

The record of three cows for two weeks in December is told in a creamery check for $21.75. Chas. Ridgeway of Buell is the owner of the cows. In the time mentioned 162 pounds of cream were produced that tested 57 1/2 pounds of butter fat. The feed given the cows was principally kale with oat and vetch hay, and a very little chop food. Mr. Ridgeway stated that without doubt kale was the best feed for milk cows and will produce the greatest returns with the least expense.—Sheridan Sun.

Fully 2,000,000 pounds of cheese will be handled during the coming year by the newly organized Coos and Curry Counties Creamery association, according to their sales agent, Claud H. Giles of Myrtle Point. The product of the Coos bay section will be shipped north via the Coos bay line and that of the Coquille valley will be transported to San Francisco and San Diego via the port of Bandon. The markets will include the western territory between Spokane and Los Angeles.

$100,000 worth of wheat was sold at Heppner during the past week, according to reliable information. The prevailing high price has been the reason for many of the farmers letting go at this time. Much of it was sold at $1.57. At Lexington a sale of wheat is pending. A number of farmers have pooled together and it is said they are about ready to sell at $1.60. The present price will be the means of cleaning up practically all of the unsold wheat in the county.

At a meeting of the Hillsboro school board Saturday, notices were ordered posted calling an election on February 17 to vote upon a proposed bond issue of $14,000 to build an addition to the Hillsboro high school. The building was constructed four years ago at an expense of $35,000 and at that time it was believed ample facilities were provided for many years to come. This year the building is crowded to capacity and a large eighth grade class will be graduated in the spring and must be provided for.

A suit was placed on file in the Jackson county circuit court Monday by C. D. Colby and others, through their attorney, B. R. McCabe, asking for an injunction against the Medford city council restraining them from issuing and accepting bids for the sale of $825,000 bonds under the Hanson plan of refinancing the city. At the city election January 9 the Hanson plan won by a six-to-one vote. The latest court action was expected, and adds another chapter to the long-drawn-out civic battle.

As a step in the campaign to maintain Portland as the chief wheat shipping center of the coast, men interested in the growth of the city will ask the present legislature to enact a measure for the establishment of a state grain inspection bureau at Portland. Only by such means, it is declared, can the port hope to continue to hold its own against Seattle, which already has installed a grain inspection service for the benefit of farmers who ship to tidewater.

Hop growers in Polk county, and especially around Independence, are considering seriously plowing up their hop yards and devoting the fields to the growing of sugar beets. Already a large number of yards have been plowed up. The sugar beet representatives, who have made several trips to that vicinity are confident that the section affords excellent opportunities for the growing of sugar beets, and that it will prove very profitable to the farmers.

Dr. Carrie E. Leiberg has sold her large tract of land near Leaburg, 20 miles east of Springfield, to Ralph B. McEwan, a big wheat grower of Athena, Ore. It is said the purchase price is about $50,000. The farm, which is one of the most picturesque in Lane county, consists of 1300 acres on the McKenzie river. A residence was built several years ago on the tract at a cost of $5000 or $6000. Dr. Leiberg and her late husband, who was a naturalist of note, bought the place about eight years ago. They transformed it from almost a wilderness into one of the most desirable residence farms in the country.

More than 3000 gallons of wine seized when Sheriff Applegate raided the place of Fred Stettler at Mountaineer, Washington county, Saturday. Stettler was arrested on a charge of bootlegging and released on bonds of $500. The wine is in charge of a custodian and will be brought to Hillsboro. Fifty-eight barrels were seized as well as the wine press and a large number of empty whisky bottles, which the sheriff says were used to retail the wine. There were also many gross of new corks. The sheriff charges sales of wine to residents of the neighborhood and says that quantities have been taken to Portland.

DIVORCES ASKED

Jealous Husband Suspects Daughter's Youthful Beau. Wives Complain

Clarence E. Apple is no longer the apple of Vera D. Apple's eye. Mrs. Apple asks for a divorce from her cruel spouse in a complaint filed in Judge J. U. Campbell's court here on Monday. She charges that he was cruel to the extent of striking her and asks $2500 gross alimony with $30 monthly for the support of two minor children. Mr. Apple is said to own property in this county valued at $5000. The couple was married at Newport, Ky., on December 15, 1909.

A husband so jealous that he placed a ladder against his house and watched his wife throughout the visit of a young man calling upon the daughter of the household is described by Mrs. P. E. Everson in a divorce complaint filed on Monday. Mrs. Everson asks to be divorced from E. Everson on the ground that he is cruel and very jealous. They were married at Ellington, Iowa, on November 25, 1888. Mrs. Everson wants $20 monthly alimony.

WANT UNION HIGH SCHOOL

A union high school to serve to west side districts of Willamette and West Linn is projected by the school boards of the two districts and may be a reality before another school year starts. The districts are large enough to maintain their own grammar schools, but a union high school is deemed necessary for the best results. The two school boards met Wednesday night with the city council of West Linn to discuss the matter of available sites, and within a week or so another joint board meeting will be held. As far as plans have been made, and they are not definite as yet, the proposal does not mean a consolidation of the school districts.

For a Pinch Of Snuff

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

In 1770—Walter Watherspoon, a student at Kings (now Columbia) college, was crossing the campus, situated in the lower part of New York, not far from the city hall, when he met Gertrude Springstead, the daughter of a China merchant, going to her home on the Battery. The two were lovers and expected to be married after young Watherspoon's graduation, which was to occur in the following June. Before seeing his fiancée coming he took his snuffbox from a pocket in the voluminous skirt of his coat and, placing a pinch between his thumb and finger, crammed it up first into one nostril, then into another, sniffing lustily.

"Oh, Walter," said the girl when they met, "if father knew you snuffed it would be all up with us! He detests the habit and would force me to break with you."

"In that case, Mistress Gertrude," replied Walter, "I must not let him see me snuffing."

"But suppose he hears that you snuff?"

"You are right. I must drop the habit at least after we are married."

Taking a lacquered box from his pocket, he handed it to Gertrude, telling her to keep it till after the wedding, at the same time promising her that he would not buy another or more snuff till they had been married.

Now, Watherspoon was poor as a church mouse and was obliged to work his way through college, which he did by giving so much of his time as he could spare from his studies to a tail-chandler. Gertrude, on the contrary, was the only child and heiress to what was then a large fortune. Naturally the young man was loth to lose his sweetheart and did not relish losing the fortune she would bring him.

Watherspoon worked hard all winter both at his studies and pouring melted tallow into candle molds. After a few weeks he found that he could get on very well without snuffing and assured Gertrude that there would be no trouble for them on that score. He even declared that taking tobacco into one's nose was a filthy habit, and he would never resume it, which was, of course, very pleasing to her.

A new convert is always an enthusiastic convert. Walter, having thrown off the shackles of a bad habit, called the attention of his friends to its disagreeableness to others than the snuffer. Why should one pause while chatting with another to cram a nasty powdered weed into his nose, making a disgusting noise through his nostrils and leaving his nose smeared with tobacco? His friends listened deferentially to his protests, but paid little attention to them, not infrequently taking out a snuffbox, offering it to him, then taking a pinch while he was speaking.

Walter kept his promise to his fiancée, nobly refraining from the habit he had eschewed. In due time he was graduated from college, and his father-in-law to be had consented that he should go into his counting room on the street facing the East river and begin preparation to take position as manager of the business when Mr. Springstead retired. While learning the business Walter was to draw a nominal salary.

Walter was the envy of all the young men in town. Engaged to a lovely girl and heir to a fine business. Surely providence had favored him.

The wedding day opened bright and beautiful. Walter, after breakfast, went to the Springstead home and was placed in a front room which faced the bay to await the hour for the ceremony. The sun glittered on the wavelets. The islands to the left, the right and in the distance stood out clear and green. Directly in the foreground was the old fort about which the city had grown and prospered. Walter was supremely happy.

The door opened and Gertrude came in bearing the snuffbox he had given her months before.

"I can't leave this here," she said. "After I have left mother will go through my room, and it will be discovered."

"Give it to me," said Walter. "I will take it away with me and get rid of it on our wedding trip."

Gertrude handed him the box and hastened away to be robed in her wedding garments. Walter opened it and held it under his nose. What a delicious fragrance! How pleasant it would be to take just one pinch! Taking a little of the snuff between his thumb and finger, he held it near his nostrils. Then he thought of the risk he would take if he indulged and put it back in the box. But he took another pinch, and again the aroma greeted his nostrils.

Mr. Springstead, passing through the hall, heard a violent sneeze. Opening the door of the room from which it seemed to come, there was Walter with an open snuffbox in one hand and his handkerchief in the other. He greeted his father-in-law to be with another sneeze.

When a couple of hours later, guests arrived to witness the nuptials there were no nuptials. No reason was assigned. Mr. Springstead put a veto on his daughter's marriage, and the groom went to his own quarters.

For a pinch of snuff he had given a bride, a fortune and a splendid business.

Not long after his loss the Revolution broke out, and he joined the continental army. He was killed at the battle of Long Island.

PUPILS BACK IN SCHOOL

Ardenwald Children Pass Over Tracks Where Barrier Was Built

While 21 children in the Sellwood Garden district, pupils at the Ardenwald school, were kept from school all last week, the county court discussed the matter of opening a passage over the Southern Pacific tracks with the public service commission. The company erected a six-wire barbed fence along its right-of-way and the children could not pass to get house. A few of the youngsters from Sellwood Gardens to the school climbed over or crawled under the fence.

County Judge H. S. Anderson last week addressed a petition to the commission at Salem asking that it take steps to establish a crossing for the pupils, but a letter suggesting the construction of an under-grade crossing was the only recognition the petition received. On Monday morning of this week, however, the pupils returned to school across the tracks, the company having agreed to cut its barrier until a crossing could be decided upon and built. Only one child was out of school from the district affected on Monday morning and the detention was from another cause.

In part the letter received from the public service commission said: "It is feasible and convenient to construct a passage way underneath the tracks and such a construction would not be expensive. No grade crossing should be established unless absolutely necessary, and in this instance the lives of children could be protected by going under the track. The commis-Beallville, Ohio.—"I wish all nervous, weak, run-down women could have Vinol. I was so run-down, weak and nervous I could not sleep. Now I am well and strong, and in better health than I have been for years.—Mrs. ANNA MILLISON, Beallville, Ohio.

How Vinol Made Her Strong

sion believes that this underground crossing should be installed instead of the grade crossing."

The letter says there will be no trouble in getting the Southern Pacific company, which has obstructed the crossing used by the school children, to grant a permit for the underground passage, and the commission agrees to seek such permission. County Judge Anderson and the commissioners have taken the matter under advisement.
