Obituaries

Mrs. Helen Maxson

Funeral services for Mrs. Helen Louise Maxson of Clackamas were held from the Clackamas church Friday afternoon and interment was in the cemetery at that place. Mrs. Maxson was the wife of Jesse Maxson and was well known in this county. She died on Wednesday afternoon at the age of 54 years. She is survived by her husband, one son, Louis, who lives at Clackamas, and one daughter, Mrs. O. M. Martin of Walla Walla, Wash.

J. W. Miller

J. W. Miller died at his home in this city on Monday of last week. He was an early pioneer, having crossed the plains in 1854 and with his father settled on a donation land claim at Perrydale. The widow and five children survive. The latter are W. W. Miller of Silverton, Mrs. Maud Tizley of New York City, Miss Lella Miller of Oregon City, Mrs. Una Stuchell of Portland and Miss Lulu Miller of Marshfield. The funeral was held in Oregon City with burial in Mount View cemetery.

Mrs. George Martin

Mrs. George Martin, widow of the late R. L. Martin, succumbed on Sunday night to an illness induced by a fall she suffered some weeks ago. Mrs. Martin died at the home of Mrs. W. W. Munger, a granddaughter. She was 84 years old and had been a resident of Oregon since 1912. In 1852 she was married to Mr. Martin in Wisconsin and three children, one of whom survives, were born to them.

The living member of the immediate family is Alva L. Martin, of Long Beach, Cal., who came here Tuesday to attend the funeral. Several weeks ago Mrs. Martin fell and injured her hip and the injury is said to have hastened her death. She had enjoyed unusually good health for a person of her years up to that time. Funeral services were held from Holman chapel on Wednesday afternoon and Rev. J. R. Landström officiated. The Presbyterian choir furnished a quartet for the services.

MISS ANDERSON SURPRISED

Friends Gather at Judge's Home to Shower Daughter, June Bride

Miss Lillian Anderson, daughter of Judge Anderson, was tendered a surprise in the way of a miscellaneous shower by a score of her friends Friday, April 27. THE GOOD ROADS WAY

Judge Dimick's Los Angeles Brother is a Booster for Bonds

There is no reasonable argument against good roads from the progressive farmer's standpoint, in the estimation of Grant B. Dimick, president of the Willamette Valley Southern railway and for many years county judge of Clackamas county. A. R. Dimick of Los Angeles, brother to Judge Dimick of Clackamas, gets his garden truck fresh from the garden before 7 o'clock every morning from a farmer who lives 52 miles from Los Angeles. He brings it by auto over a hard-surfaced road. Judge Dimick says it takes the farmers from Beaver Creek neighborhood, 6 miles from Oregon City, one and one-half hours to drive into town when they make up their minds to come and can come with a little "jag" of garden truck. —Oregon Voter.

PIGEON SHOOTERS TIE

Charles Parker Runs Up High Score Against LaGrande Team

Oregon City and LaGrande tied with 113 clay pigeons each out of a possible 125 in the Columbia-Willamette Trapshooting association matches Sunday, if advice received from LaGrande give the correct scores of that team.

The local team shot at its traps in the north end of the city Sunday morning and Charles Parker shot the highest score of the day when he broke 24 out of a possible 25 pigeons. Other scores of Oregon City men, parading under the name of the Canemah Gun club, are: C. W. Wright, 23; R. C. Parker, 23; H. F. Tschirgi, 22; H. E. Williams, 21. The local shooters are due to rest next Sunday and take no part in the competition.

A Peddling Partnership

By WARREN MILLER

Johnny Cosgrove, millionaire, determined to marry a girl who didn't know he was rich and at the same time a person of intrinsic worth.

John was fond of an outdoor life, and his plan was influenced by this taste. He concluded to rig himself up as a peddler, travel through the country selling such articles as women need and thus make the acquaintance of some girl whom he could study in cognito. He bought an auto delivery wagon and stocked it with tin pans, pins and needles, hosiery, shoes, grid-irons and every article he could think of that a woman would want.

It was a bright spring morning when John's loaded auto was brought up before his house by his man Thomas, whom he had charged with procuring the outfit, and John, rigged out in a ready made suit he had bought at a cheap clothing store and a faded straw hat, sallied forth and, taking the wheel, started on his tour.

"If I don't get a wife," he said to himself, "I'll at least enjoy myself." Then aloud to Thomas: "Forward to day's mail to Waverly to Martin Irvine. I'll keep you posted where to send it from that on."

Johnny drove off, and a window sash on the opposite side of the street was closed at the same time. A few minutes later a girl emerged from a front door beneath the aforesaid window and hurried down the street.

Johnny struck the road to Waverly, then began to stop at houses along the way. He chaffed the wives, chucked the children under the chin and otherwise made himself agreeable. The consequence was that he sold his goods readily, though he generally made his prices to suit purchasers. When night came he put up at the only hotel in Waverly.

In the morning he breakfasted—on spring chicken—and after the arrival of the mail started again on his travels. He had not gone far before he heard the rattling of a machine behind him and pulled out to the right to let it go by. As it did so Johnny saw that its rear was not up to hold a sewing machine which was strapped down, and the car was driven by a young woman, comely, though plainly dressed, who called to him to know if the road held good and for how long.

Johnny gave her the information she desired, and the two fell into conversation. The girl told Johnny that she was a sewing machine traveling agent. She also informed him that her father was comfortably off in this world's goods, but she didn't propose to sit around waiting for a husband and must have occupation.

"By Jove," exclaimed Johnny to himself, "that's the kind of girl I'm looking for!"

John kept on one side of the road, the girl on the other, the two moving side by side except when vehicles passed, at which time John fell behind.

"I wish," said John to her after awhile, "that we could make a double team of it, a joint stock concern, to take in peddler's goods and sewing machines."

"Oh, we couldn't do that," said the girl, who gave her name as Molly Sparks, "though I'd like to ever so much. I sometimes feel afraid traveling on lonely roads."

"What's the objection to a partnership?" asked John.

"I don't think it would be exactly proper. People would take us for man and wife, and when they found we were not they'd talk."

John thought awhile, then proposed that they should lay out a route together for the next day, the girl to put her sewing machine in his motor-car. They would stop for the night at different hotels, but travel together during the day. The girl, with apparent reluctance, assented to the plan, and the next day they carried it out. But they paid more attention to each other than to peddling.

This method of travel now kept up until John was satisfied that he might go farther and fare worse. The girl was far above the ordinary country lass, and John saw an advantage in marrying in his own class. He proposed to her, but at first was refused on the ground that if she married a peddler her family would disown her. But John was bent on winning her and finally got her consent to marry him without saying anything about it at home. They could then travel together with more propriety.

They were married at a country church and by a country parson, and after the wedding John said they must have a rest from work and they must go to his home for awhile in the city. His bride consented, and he took her to his palatial residence.

John looked at his bride, expecting to see astonishment depicted in her face. Instead, she laid aside her wraps as if she had always lived there.

"Didn't you think you were marrying a peddler?" he asked in wonder.

"No, I didn't. I knew I was marrying Johnny Cosgrove, millionaire."

"How did you know that?" asked John, agast.

"I live a few doors down the street and have often seen you, though you didn't know me. I saw you drive away as a peddler. I didn't know what you were going for, but I thought it would be a good chance to go for you and make you in."

"Stung!" said Johnny.

"No, you're not. I've got money of my own. I knew you were a good catch and thought I'd snare you, that's all. I'll make you a loving wife."

And she did.

THEY ARE STILL DANCING

Germans of Damascus Deny Their Hall Has Been Closed

Damascus, Ore., May 1, 1917. To the editor.—I wish to call your attention to an article which appeared in your last week's paper. It stated that the Damascus German hall was closed till after the war is over. Now that is a mistake. Someone out here at Damascus has been misinformed in regard to this matter, or is trying to knock against us German-Americans out here at Damascus and is using your paper as a tool to carry out their object. Such falsehoods are damaging to our dances unless they are rectified in your paper this week. We have a dance at our hall Saturday night, May 5. This dance was announced over two weeks ago. You came out in your paper and state our hall is closed. Now, you realize what that means to us out here at Damascus.

Mr. Editor, I don't blame you for this mistake, no, not at all. You depend upon your reporters. You can't possibly investigate as to the truth of the many reports which are sent in to you. Now allow me to give you a word of warning in these very trying and troublesome times, when all kinds of means are used to misrepresent facts and mislead people. Be very careful in publishing things which are sent in to you, especially such reports concerning the German element of our country. You know there are many people among us who are very bitter against the Germans, and these cranks will do most anything to cause us Germans in this country serious injury. Trusting that you will rectify this mistake,

I am yours truly,
ORVEN KROTSCH.

SPRING AND DIVINITY

Mrs. Burr's Letter Says Divine Spark Should Permeate Hearts

Clackamas, Oregon, Route 1, April 30, 1917; to the editor.—Spring is here and has thrown a mantle of green over hill and valley. The cherry trees are in bloom and nature has come forth again in all the glory of youth and beauty. The birds are singing and preparing to build their nests and will bring forth their young to fill the earth with joy and song.

And mankind is all nature combined. All nature gave of its best to create mankind. The best of every part of the animal creation was used in creating the physical part of humanity. You study the lower animal kingdom and you will find some talent in every animal and all these talents are handed up the mankind to be used for man's support and life. And of the inner part of man, the soul is a spark of divine love. God created man after his own image. And to be like God, man would be filled with divine love and would grow better every day. Man to be as God created him would be so filled with divine love that he would throw that love out around him and our old earth would soon be rid of sin and suffering and war and famine.

Let us all try and be as God created us and make Oregon the first state of the union.

MRS. VIOLA BURR.

"What A Soldier Wants"

Good intentions do not go very far in time of war. Hell is paved with them. But the Young Men's Christian association depends upon something more than good intentions. When our troops moved to the Mexican border, the association knew just what to do and how to do it without any guess-work. So it has become an institution in the army.

In the first place, its efficiency was marked. When we reached the border, a secretary came asking for permission to erect an association building. We gave permission—with mental reservations, knowing the difficulties to be met in securing lumber. Within a few days the building was up! I don't know to this day where that lumber came from—out of the clear sky, I guess. Weeks passed before the lumber for our mess shacks arrived.

Then, too, the association's organization is supreme. Its leadership was accurate in its understanding of our soldiers' needs. I liked the way the rough man was made to feel at home. I liked the Christianlike manner in which the secretary met the diffident young man who was not over-awed.

No system will ever succeed without proper leadership. Certainly the association had such local leaders. They were not holier-than-thou men, but good, red-blooded fellows who bore every evidence of being helpful without being obtrusive. They were a wonderful power for good!

I could tell by the attitude of the many men who went into the buildings that unconsciously and subconsciously they were being raised to higher levels, that they were quieter, that they had better mastery of themselves, better ideals—and were better soldiers.

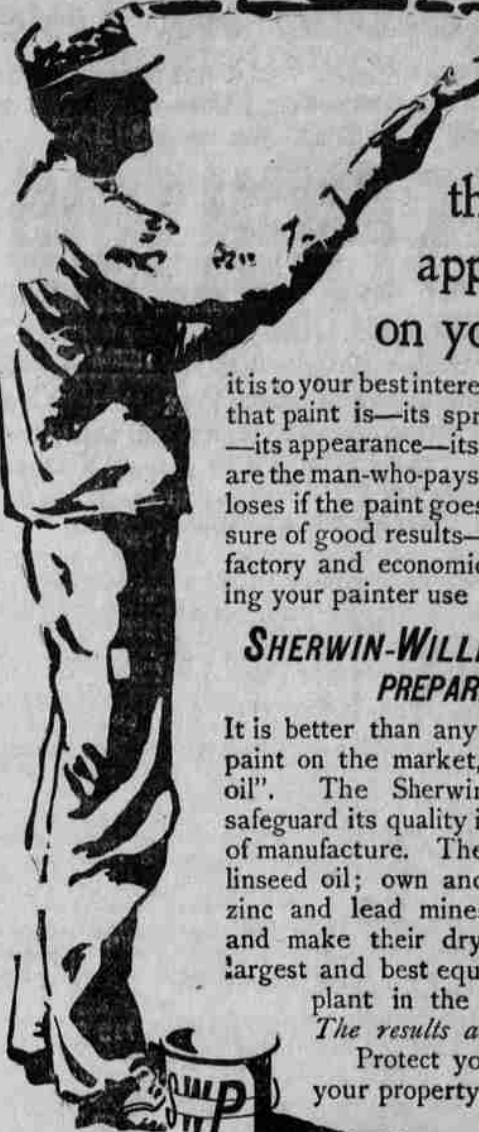

When the order went out that houses of prostitution were to be put under guard, when we watched every woman who got off a train until her business was known, when, if necessary, she was put out of that vicinity, when we ordered disuse of whiskey and other liquors, the association joined us in helping to make soldier sentiment in favor of that very action.

"It is being done for your own good, and you men ought to appreciate it and approve of it," I heard one secretary say.

If America goes to war, money can be turned over to the Young Men's Christian association with every confidence that it will be expended scientifically and along lines most acceptable to soldiers.—Major-General John F. O'Ryan.

SOCIETY GETS BOY

Officials May Enter Contest for Mother of Merle Blood

Youthful Merle Blood, whose life the last week was one of rapid action, was taken from the home of his guardian last Thursday by Agent Teuscher of the Boys' and Girls' Aid society of Portland and was returned to the society's home at Portland. Mr. Teuscher came here Thursday, visited the farm of W. H. Wettlaufer near Clackamas and returned to Portland with the boy without advising the officers that he had secured the lad.

Merle Blood is a ward of the society since he was sent to it from The Dalles. His mother, Mrs. Elsie Barber, lives in Oregon City. On Tuesday county officials found the boy wandering along the railroad tracks after he had run away from the Wettlaufer farm. They located the mother and returned the son to her. The following day Wettlaufer, a former minister, claimed the lad again. Just what effect the Aid society's action may have county officials are not prepared to say. They may contest the society's claim and may decide to let the organization keep the boy.

BORING CELEBRATES

I. O. O. F. Foundation Anniversary Calls Forth Big Gathering

The 98th anniversary of the I. O. O. F. in America was celebrated in the I. O. O. F. hall at Boring on Saturday evening. Five subordinate lodges joined in celebrating the event, as follows: Gresham No. 125, Estacada No. 175, Sandy No. 195, Rockwood No. 213 and Boring No. 234.

A program of musical and literary numbers was given and the address of the evening was delivered by Henry S. Westbrook, grand master for Oregon, who at the close presented, on behalf of Sandy lodge, a past grand's regalia to Sol Garrison. A banquet was served at the close of the program. Three hundred members of the order attended from Estacada, Gresham, Rockwood, Sandy, Portland and Boring, special cars on the electric line carrying the visitors most places and back, and autos carrying the Sandy delegation.

CATTLE PRICES UP

Monday's Market Shows Steady Tone. Few Sheep In

Monday's cattle market was very active at sharply higher prices. Advances ranged from 25 to 75 cents. Best beef grades made the largest gains, there being an advance of fully 50 cents on all prime beef steers. While Monday's run was only moderate the quality of the cattle was excellent. The feature of the market was the sale of two loads of yearling steers and heifers, the steers bringing $11.25 while the heifers brought $10.65. Four loads of grain-fed steers brought $11 with a string from $10.50 up. Ordinary grades sold from $9.50 to $9.85, with a load of good heavy steers at $10.15. Strictly fat cows brought $8.50 to $9, with ordinary to good cows from $7.

75 to $8.25; common dairy cows brought from $6 to $7. Good to prime heifers brought from $9 to $10. Prime heavy bulls brought $7.75 to $8.25, with medium light bulls from $6.50 to $7. Ordinary dairy bulls sold from $5.50 to $6.50. Best light veal calves again brought $10 with heavy calves selling from $7 to $9.

The receipt of hogs, while not being very large Monday, met with only a small demand, which resulted in a good steady market. One load of heavy hogs brought $15.85, with a couple of loads at $15.75. The bulk of the sales were made from $15.50 to $15.65. Pigs sold from $14.25 to $14.60.

Sheep receipts continue light with little demand and prices are practically unchanged. A small bunch of valley lambs sold at $13.50 with ewes at $11.
