MODERN WAR DISEASE.

Shell Shock and the Way It Hits and Afflicts Its Victims.

To the medical profession modern war has brought a new disease, known as shell shock or "shock shell," as the British war office officially calls it.

To understand its cause and action we must take our place in the trenches with a company on the first line. An attack is shimmering and the constant preliminary bombardment of heavy and light artillery is on.

Shells, shrapnel, high explosives are rained on them and on the trench with its narrow communication to the supports in the rear until there is a constant din of tremendous explosions and the air is filled with noxious gas. Time has come to seek cover and the soldier ducks his steel helmeted head into his underground dugout, crowds down with his mates and waits for the storm to blow over. Hours pass, days pass, some preliminary bombardments lasting four or five days, and food, water, patience and nerves are exhausted by the awful din, the noxious air and the crowded quarters with the sickening sights of nearby men dismembered or otherwise wounded unto death.

Then it is that minds go awry. Shell shock attacks the veterans as well as the recruits. The poor lads with neurotic tendencies, with poor nervous reserve or with histories of sapping excesses and habits, begin to experience an ever growing fear. Their limbs start to tremble, their hearing becomes affected, they cannot talk or see, and they have become gibbering or silent, trembling human animals, almost literally scared to death.

Scientifically, the disease may be divided into two classes. One is the pseudo shell shock following the course outlined in men of unstable nervous equilibrium, deprived of food and made to fear for their lives; and the second class is true shell shock occurring in men who really sustain blows of falling sand bags and planks or are buried in the upheaval of earth following shell explosion. Unfortunately the false division comprises over 95 per cent of the total number reported, and they offer the poorest hope of recovery or the proper martial spirit which the soldier should have. The true cases generally recover within a fortnight. They may, however, slip on then into the pseudo class and become unfit for active military duty.—Dr. Kellogg Speer in Leslie's.

George Lawrence, railroad fireman, Kittrell, Miss., writes: "I used three one-dollar bottles of Foley Kidney Pills when I was so sick I hardly could stay on my engine. My back ached all the time; my kidneys acted sluggish; dull headache; felt sleepy all the time; nervous; had to rise six to eight times each night. Foley Kidney Pills cured me."
