

FOUR DISTINCT TIMES TO PREPARE CABBAGE CROPS

Western Oregon has unusual opportunity for cabbage culture. There are a few months in the year when home grown cabbage may not be available.

There are four distinct times of the year when the home gardener should make plans for crops of cabbage. The first heads to be ready for marketing in the spring are obtained from those plants which have been set out in the fall. This phase of cabbage growing is, according to my observation, not pushed as much as it should be. Last winter was an unusually severe one and yet plants in this neighborhood not only successfully withstood the winter conditions, but fine cabbage at this time of the year is the result of the planting. With a normal spring season this crop would have been ready to be cut the last part of May. Early Jersey Wakefield is the variety used for this lot of cabbage. The seed is sown out-of-doors about the second week of September. This cabbage is ready for cutting about one and one-half to two months before that which is grown from plants produced this spring.

Young cabbage plants which have been set in the garden in March or April produce cabbage which is available through late June, July and August. The same variety as was used for fall setting is used for the spring work.

In order to have cabbage ready for the early fall it is necessary to set out plants in June and for October and November harvesting the plants should go out in the field some time in July. In both of these latter instances, the transplanting should be done when the weather is cloudy and the soil moist. For the early fall cabbage, All Head Early and Autumn King are largely grown, and the varieties used for winter consist of Danish Ball Head and Late Flat Dutch. By storing these latter varieties one can have cabbage well into the winter and hence the time which will elapse from the use of the last winter cabbage to the cutting of the first head from the fall set plants is not long.

These four seasons, therefore, illustrate the necessity of preparing at the proper time of the year so that there may be successive harvestings of cabbage.—A. G. Bouquet, Associate Professor of Vegetable Gardening, O. A. C.

The break was discussed because no speaker was provided to represent the unions.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TREE

Lightning, which flashed over this section for several hours Wednesday night, struck a tall fir tree on the farm of E. R. Gregory, near Greenwood, and set fire to the tree. The blaze was first noticed by Charles Rider, whose farm is close to the Gregory place. The tree was still burning Thursday, although the top had fallen. The rain Thursday evening extinguished the blaze. Several trees fell during the storm and some slight damage to fruit was reported from different sections of the county.

She was the only one in the party who could swim.

YOUNG OLD MEN.

Mental Ability Not Always Dulled by the Passing Years.

A generation ago it was customary to talk of those who had reached forty as of mature age. A man of those years is now considered young, and at sixty or seventy can have a brilliant future still ahead.

That our forefathers had no such conceptions of relative youthfulness can easily be shown. The constitution provided that no one should be eligible for election to the senate at an earlier age than thirty-five, the reasons advanced being that such a restriction was necessary in order to keep the senate made up of grave and reverend seigniors—elder statesmen, who would not be blown about with every veering wind of political doctrine. Today there is not a senator who is just barely beyond the age limit, and the great majority do not come into senatorial honors short of fifty and fifty-five.

Alexander Hamilton was a sedate secretary of the treasury at thirty-two. The younger Pitt became prime minister, first lord of the treasury and chancellor of the exchequer of England at twenty-four. Washington spoke of retirement from active life to well earned rest and leisure for his remaining years when still but forty-six.

In recent times we have had no presidents young in years by the former standards, unless Roosevelt be classed as an exception in connection with his first term of service. Even the popular novelists have sensed the change, now making their successful business men of forty or thereabouts attractive to the heart of the female reader. This is admittedly an age of young men, as has been claimed, but they are still young anywhere on the sunny side of seventy, and many of the most efficient have passed the three score mark.—Thomas F. Logan in Leslie's.

SUBMARINE MINES.

Explosive Power of These Coast and Harbor Defenses.

Not the least important weapon for defending our coasts and our harbors from the attacks of hostile warships is the submarine mine. Though it is perhaps the least obvious looking of naval defenses, if it is once hit by an invading warship its tremendous explosive power will sink the ship in less time than any other weapon could.

The shock of the striking vessel automatically explodes the mine, says the Popular Science Monthly, and the violently expanding gases from the powder crush in the hull of the ship in a twinkling.

Submarine mines are made of an outer casing of steel and an inner charge of high explosive. A separate chamber containing nothing but air gives the mine buoyancy. The mines are carried in small light draft boats to the positions previously mapped out. The boat simply drops the mines with their anchors overboard. When the cable is all paid out the buoyant mine will be floating about ten feet below the water's surface.

The mines lying far outside of a harbor contain their ignition system within themselves. This may be a number of percussion pins placed all around the outside of the mine. When a ship strikes one of these the heat of the impact ignites the powder instantly. Or an internal ignition system may be employed. When a ship hits the mine it pulls it over. This releases an iron ball which is ordinarily held in a small cup in the center of the mine. The ball falls out of the cup and pulls upon a string, releasing a trigger and firing off the charge.

Varieties of Sables.

Next to the Barguzin sables the best are the Yakutsk, then the Nikolai and the Kamchatka. This last type of fur is much liked by Americans who cannot afford the imperial sable, for it is a big animal with heavy fur, but the color is very light. The Parisian lady who cannot buy a Barguzin sable usually prefers the Anzur, which is small, but of a bluish color. Chinese sables have thin and light colored fur, and the Hudson Bay sable, a kind of pine marten, is hardly a satisfactory substitute.—New York Times.

Spinach Paper.

According to a French horticulturist, M. de Noyer, spinach stems contain 46 per cent of cellulose. He claims to have actually made paper from the vegetable, following the methods of the Grenoble papermaking school. If the waste portions of spinach are used for this purpose he believes they will produce a most satisfactory writing paper, which will cost considerably less than the present high quality grades.—Popular Science Monthly.

Why Straight-Distilled Gasoline

Because, in a straight-distilled gasoline the boiling points gradually rise in a continuous unbroken chain, giving easy starting, quick and smooth acceleration, power and mileage. Boiling points alone reveal gasoline quality. As the U. S. Bureau of Standards states, gravity tells you nothing. No mixture, however cleverly concocted and no matter what its gravity, can contain the correct, unbroken series of boiling points.

Red Crown is guaranteed to be a straight-distilled refinery gasoline, the boiling points of which form a continuous chain. Red Crown is not a mixture.
