Resume of the News of the Week from All Parts of Oregon

C. A. Stevens, Oakland, Ore., planing mill proprietor, entered into a contract with the war department last week whereby he will furnish 400,000 oak tent stakes for army uses within the next 90 days. The execution of the order means the disbursing of approximately $5000 for labor and wood among Oakland people.

Redmond is making elaborate preparations for the seventh annual potato show to be held at Redmond October 18, 19 and 20. Besides the usual fair attractions there will be prominent speakers from other sections of the northwest. A special feature of the show this year will be the Deschutes valley seed potato auction sale. Five bushel entries of 100 per cent potatoes will compete in this contest for a prize of $150.

J. W. Sweeney of Portland, who holds a subcontract for the Warren Construction company for the building of a large part of the 30-mile link in the Pacific highway leading north from Oakland through the Pass Creek canyon to the Lane county line, visited Oakland last week to establish three grading camps. Others will be established at Isadora and Rise Hill. About 200 men will be employed through the winter months in clearing the roadway and upon rock and team work.

Jeff Baldwin, the escaped convict who was captured at Sheed last week by Deputy Sheriff Frum, after a spectacular revolver duel, and who later made a desperate attempt to escape from the officer, has a noteworthy record at the Oregon prison.

An important event in the development of Gold Hill's industries will be the operation of the $700,000 cement factory on the outskirts of the city. The reorganization plans for the Portland Beaver Cement company, drawn by President Fletcher Linn of Portland, have been adopted and it is expected that the plant will be in operation next week.

The contract for the construction of the section of Columbia highway, between Mosier and Chenoweth creek, was awarded to the Elliott Contracting company of Portland, after the bids had been opened by the county court. The contract price was 70, 124 for both grades. The bid for the grade from the Chenoweth creek to the top of Seven-Mile Hill was $39, 115 and from that point to Mosier $31,000.

Fruit is being thrown away because there is no market for it, according to reports reaching Baker from Long Creek, in the John Day valley. Although Long Creek is not known as a fruit section, there are many orchards there, and this year the production far exceeded local consumption.

J. P. Aplin and son, L. J. Aplin, have begun the construction here of a five-story flour mill at Hood River. The first unit of the plant, to be devoted to the manufacture of wheat, rye and corn cereals, will be 18 by 46 feet. The second unit, to be 24 by 32 feet, will house the flour rollers.

It has been decided to open all correspondence courses of the University of Oregon to soldiers and sailors free during the period of the war. The work will be carried on through the extension department.

The Albany chapter of the Red Cross society made a net profit of $989.97 serving meals during the past month to men on route from California to American Lake, Wash., for service in the national army. Because most of the food was donated the society had an expense of only $568.83 and received $1558.80 from the government for the meals served.

A meeting of stockmen was held in Canyon City recently, when the executive committee of the Cattle and Horse Raisers' association of Oregon and Baker stockmen met with the local organization. The meeting was held at the courthouse, and matters of interest to stockmen were discussed. Several new members were added to the organization. At midnight a banquet was spread at Morris hall, and about 60 stockmen and their wives partook of the repast.

J. W. Morton, Hood River attorney and owner of a large ranch just west of the city which is crossed by the new survey of the Columbia river highway, has offered to withdraw a notice of appeal to the supreme court of a case that resulted in an adverse decision to the complainant in the circuit court there, provided the county court meets certain demands involving the maintenance of stretches of the old state road and the building of new roads connecting his farm with the Columbia river highway. Mr. Morton, who sued the county for $10,000 damages, which he alleged he would suffer if the Columbia river highway is built according to the survey adopted on the original report of the Hood River county road viewers, was awarded damages of $1.

Owing to shortage of feed on the High Desert and dry land sections of Crook and Deschutes counties, large numbers of jackrabbits are collecting about the ranches in the irrigated valleys and are feeding on the grain fields. County Agriculturist R. A. Ward has planned the third annual jackrabbit campaign to commence next month.

Ira Hutchins, general manager of the Brownsville and the Lebanon fruit canneries, says that evergreen blackberries are still being brought in by growers. The fruit of these berries began coming in early in August, and it is the last half of the crop now being received. The berries that have been grown back in the hills and wooded sections of Linn county, in the foothills east of Brownsville and Lebanon in the region of Holley and Sweet Home are now being delivered. That region is ideal for the growth and cultivation of the late evergreen blackberry and the crop matures much later than that in the valley.

No time is to be lost in the construction of the municipal grain elevator in Portland. The dock commission Friday decided to advertise for bids and open proposals next Thursday on four contracts covering preliminary work. These are in relation to clearing the land, construction of a retaining wall and making a fill on the site.

"We have a splendid crop of cranberries this year, if we could only get them picked," says W. E. Schimpff, one of the Clatsop Plains cranberry growers. "The crop is just about one-tenth picked and at the present rate of picking cranberries will still be picked in Clatsop county next December. The work is outdoors and cranberries are only gathered when the weather is nice. Contrary to general belief, gum boots are not necessary for picking this fruit."

If the labor shortage at Baker is not relieved soon the Oregon Lumber company will issue a call for girls to work in its box factory, according to Superintendent Strong. The Oregon Lumber company does not employ women, but has been considering a departure from its custom. Other mills are expected to be forced to adopt the same means to avoid seriously curtailing their output.

Oregon dairymen, acting through their newly organized league, have asked Food Administrator Hoover to obtain a higher price for milk from the milk condenseries, which now pay $2.50 per 100 pounds. This is declared to be inadequate in view of the high prices the tinne product sells for and the factories are said to be paying extravagant dividends. In view of the high cost of feed, labor and other incidentals dairymen must consider in making both ends meet, it is declared in the telegram to Mr. Hoover that the returns to the dairymen are much too small. The Dairymen's league and Alma D. Katz, president, signed the Hoover message.

BOYS HAVE FINE TIME AT STATE FAIR CAMP

The boys' camp at the state fair this year was a feature that proved a delight to the 37 young school boys who attended it as a reward for their work in connection with school club contests. From Clackamas county Clyde Denny of Estacada and Harold Kammerer of Dryland school were registered.

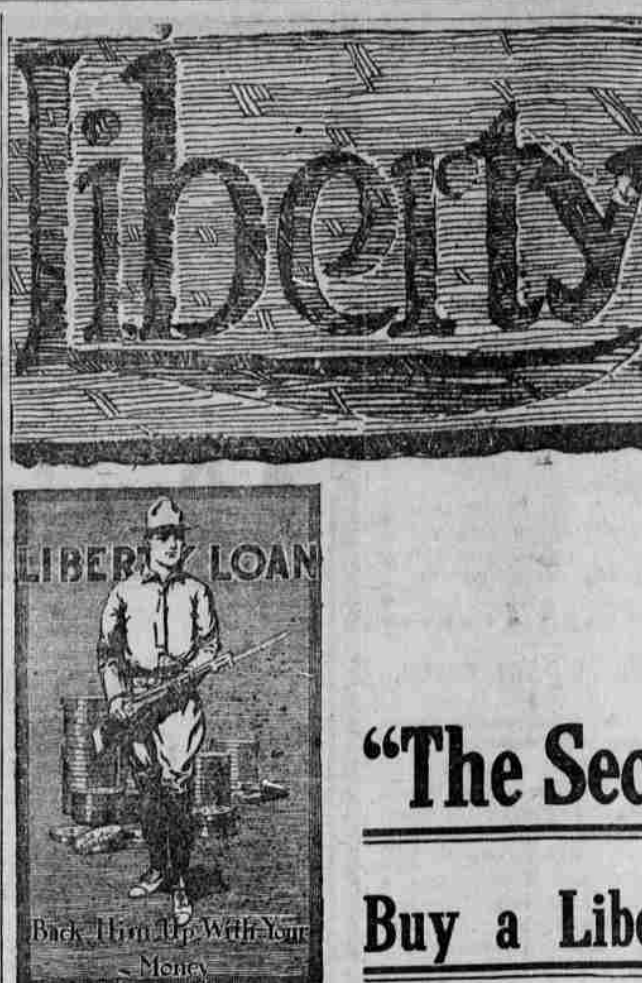

Brenton Vedder, supervisor of Clackamas county schools, was superintendent of the camp and while he saw to it that the youngsters had the time of their lives he outlined and directed a course of work that kept them in good health and spirits and resulted in much good to them. The boys were quartered in large tents and these and the fair grounds generally were scenes of many good times.

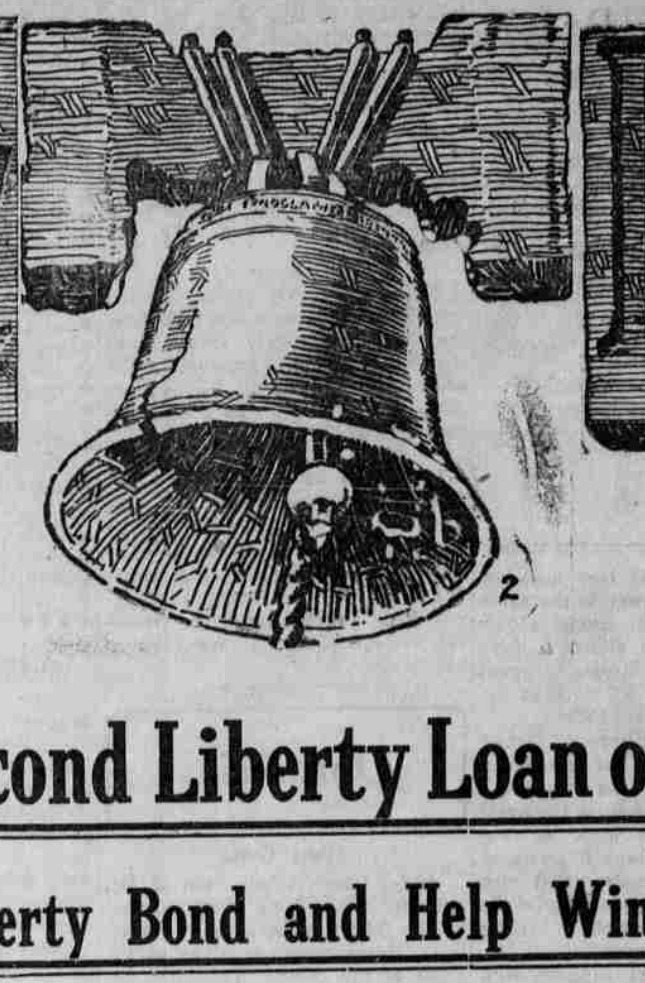

One outing arranged under the direction of Mr. Vedder, was an automobile tour about the city of Salem, during which the boys, many of whom had never been away from home before, visited all the state institutions and were taken through the state capital building. The money for the tour was donated by an interested citizen who observed the good work being carried on. To the boys in the school camp goes the credit for the neat appearance of the entire fair grounds. Aside from the concession streets and exhibit places for stock, the boys were responsible for the cleanliness of the grounds and long before the crowds began to stir for the day the entire place had been cleaned of all trash.

Under Mr. Vedder's direction the boys lived up to a program that kept them busy from the time they got out of bed at 5:45 until they retired at 9:30 in the evening. They had from 9:30 in the evening to 6:45 to do the cleaning-up work and at 7 had breakfast. After a recess they were given about an hour of real drill for its physical benefits and at 10 o'clock they were lectured. Each day some prominent speaker addressed the boys upon timely topics. They lunched at the noon hour and in the afternoon, if special entertainment had not been provided for them, they were allowed their liberty to see the fair for themselves.

JUDGE GETS GOATS

Two registered Angora goats, said to be among the best stock in Clackamas county, came here Monday from a large herd at Myton, Utah, consigned to Judge Grant B. Dimick, who immediately transferred the animals to his farm at Greenwood, near this city.

THE REDMAN'S VISION

Retrospect by His White Brother
Inspired by Placid Waters and Progress

(Rev. Geo. H. Bennett)

Somewhere in the dim ages of the past when this romantic spot on the brow of the cliff was shaded by giant firs, and the graceful arrowwood was in blossom, the roar of the cataract alone broke the silence of the mighty solitude. Here on this hoary rock, balanced on the brink of the precipice, sat a warrior of a long vanished race. Clad in the skins of beasts, and armed with an axe of stone, a long, elastic bow, and feathered arrows tipped with flint, he seemed the pioneer of his race in a land of deepest mystery.

The silvery waters of the placid river mirrored the maples that spread their leafy branches over its banks, and the terraced slopes that rose to the distant rim of sky were serrated with the green spires of the somber forest. Seated on this hoary rock which for a hundred centuries had been a mute sentinel of the shadowy gorge, the primeval huntsman looked out upon the shining river and the million tree-tops, that spread away in unbroken verdure toward the setting sun. His roving eye caught the movement of a lustrous herd of elk quietly browsing on the marshy flat below the cliff. He saw a snowy headed eagle careening in majestic circles in the azure heights. A huge bear with claw and fang was tearing up an ancient moss-covered log to gather its hidden store of larvae. And as the sullen roar of the mist veiled cataract smote his ear, the gentle breeze brought the witching odors of the mountain cinnamon and sweet briar to soothe his senses—and Nature reigned supreme. And thus he fell into a reverie.

A soft haze spread over the wooded gorge and mantled the tumbling cataract. It came up from the lower reaches of the mystic river and mellowed the somber, rocky slopes. And then he saw a wondrous vision. The pinnaled trees turned into human habitations. They stood before him in hues and forms unknown before, and filled the radiant hillsides. The pathless wood faded out into broad avenues lined with noble trees, where many people came and went, and children played. Vast structures rose of wood and stone, mightier than the great council lodge, and filled the gorge to the river's brink. Monsters bellowed with fire and smoke and sped with streaming light up and down the enchanted valley, and even on the bosom of the brimming river. The cataract was blotted out, and tall columns of sooty smoke arose from many mighty pipes, as when the gods smoke their pipes of peace around the council fire. The roar of the misty cataract was lost in the hum of industry and in the anthem of the age of progress. Nature no longer reigned supreme.

And thus the savage huntsman saw the forest solitude which had slumbered for a hundred centuries, suddenly awaken to become a teeming land—a realization strange and bewildering, when seen from afar in the reverie of the lonely redman.

He awoke from his reverie, as a lordly deer bounded away from the rimrocks above him. The mother grouse was hovering her downy brood in the sweet briars. The somber forest still mantled the shadowy gorge. The eagle had sought her lofty crag, and the sun was lost behind the distant mountain, while the roaring cataract and dreaming river awaited the sunrise that should in some distant age smile upon the City by the Falls.

SCHOOL REPORT CARDS

Report cards and envelope carriers approved for Clackamas county schools by Superintendent J. E. Calavan, are for sale at The Courier office. The envelopes are made of strong manila paper with a metal clasp and the cards are printed on attractive, heavy Bristol board paper and are undoubtedly the most serviceable cards to be had. The card, which folds into a four-page booklet, contains not only the space for grading results in daily and monthly work and examinations, but rules and regulations for children. School teachers and district clerks desiring such cards will do well to order them at once before the supply on hand is exhausted.

The Whole Neighborhood Knows

Mrs. Anna Pelzer, 2525 Jefferson St., So. Omaha, Neb., writes: "I can recommend Foley's Honey and Tar as a sure cure for coughs and colds. It cured my daughter of a bad cold. My neighbor, Mrs. Benson, cured herself and her whole family with Foley's Honey and Tar, and everyone in our neighborhood speaks highly of it." This reliable family remedy masters croup. It clears the air passages and eases the gasping, strangling fight for breath.—Jones Drug Co.

WILLIAMS SAYS ARMY WILL BE A GREAT ONE

With praise for the members of that part of the new national army stationed at American Lake, Wash., Harry E. Williams, captain of company F, 361st infantry, has written to the local lodge of Elks to obtain, if possible, boxing gloves and reading matter for the men of his command. Captain Williams, who was a student at the officers' reserve corps training camp at San Francisco this summer, was formerly exalted ruler of the local lodge of Elks, and has been prominent in military activities in the state. His letter to

George A. Swafford, secretary of the lodge, says:

"I have been intending for some time to drop you a line, but shortly after my arrival here they turned over a company of 150 men to me and I have been working 16 to 18 hours a day and ever since only taking 15 minutes for meals. This is about the fastest life I have ever lived, but as soon as all the draft men have reported we will get settled down and I hope have more regular hours.

"I am very agreeably surprised with the results so far and I think the national army, when it is whipped into shape, is going to be the most wonderful army the world has ever seen. I have found that the men are all perfectly satisfied and keen for work. We have had no growlers nor no one kicking because they were drafted. The only kicks we have are made by men who failed to pass the physical examination. I now have a company of 174 men and we are having to start without any company fund and without any way of getting anything for our company amusement rooms.

"I had Phil Hammond and Charles Moulton for a couple of days but they were transferred to another company and I don't know whether I will be able to get them back or not. I am, however, going to try. They both seem perfectly contented and Phil is the biggest hustler that has shown up at camp and has made a hit with all the officers. He has been offered two special details already as a non-commissioned officer on the staff, but upon my advice rejected both as there is no question in my mind that with the experience he will get in the ranks drilling he will undoubtedly get a commission within six months."

Captain Williams asks the lodge for boxing gloves and reading matter, such as the magazines that are discarded after being read at the club rooms.

NEW PARTY FORMED

Approves Platform Draft. National Prohibitionists Meet

Chicago Wednesday became the birthplace of a new "National party," which is yet unnamed, but is to be recruited from the prohibition, progressive, single tax and social democratic groups.

A tentative draft of the platform approves universal suffrage, national prohibition, extinction of land monopoly, public ownership of coal mines, oil wells, telegraph and telephone systems and other public utilities and the use of union labor in all government activities.

The prohibition national committee, which was in session, voted to concentrate its efforts in 1918 on 20 congressional districts and to raise a campaign fund of $300,000 for that purpose. This plan is to be abandoned if the amalgamation of the new "National party" is effected.

Four-Minute Men Speak
Oregon City's four-minute men came into their own in the two local theatres Tuesday when J. Dean Butler and William Hammond took up oratorical cudgels on behalf of patriotism. Mr. Butler spoke to the audience at the Star theatre and Mr. Hammond appeared at the Grand.

LITTLE GIRL SUFFERS

Overcome by Fumes of Gasoline from Automobile Exhaust

While P. M. Hart was at work in his garage Monday his 3-year-old daughter, Vivian, playing about the place, was overcome by the gasoline fumes from a machine in which the motor had been left running. The fumes overcame the youngster and for some time she was unconscious. Mr. Hart discovered the condition of the child in time to administer first aid and probably thereby saved her life.
