AMERICA SLEEPS IN GREAT CRISIS

FOOD CONSERVATION MEETING
DRAWS CROWD TOO LARGE FOR COURT HOUSE

MANY MEETINGS ARE HELD

Speakers Urge Housewives to Save Every Possible Bit.
Teacher Talks.

With an audience so large that it could not be accommodated in the circuit court room Monday evening, Clackamas county's food conservation campaign was successfully launched, and the meeting transferred to the auditorium of the Baptist church. Other meetings were held in school houses and public halls throughout the county and in practically every case the attendance was larger than had been expected.

At the meeting in the Baptist church several hundred people listened to the interesting program, which was featured by the addresses of W. A. Burke, of Portland, and George C. Brownell, of Oregon City. Mr. Burke charged America with being asleep so far as the seriousness of food conservation movements is concerned and suggested that when this country begins to watch and mourn over the casualty lists from the front its people will understand the necessity of saving food. Mr. Brownell made a fine patriotic plea for co-operation.

Miss Zoe Brown, head of the domestic science department of the local high school, explained how the food conservation plan is to be worked out, not through denial, but by substitution, and she suggested many ways for substituting foods. Walter A. Dimick spoke on behalf of the Girls' Honor Guard. Other speakers were Joseph E. Hedges, Mrs. David Caulfield and E. J. Toose, superintendent of schools, who was in charge of the meeting.

The musical program for the evening was opened with the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," led by Dr. Roy A. Prudden. Frank Aldredge sang a solo, "Till the Boys Come Home," and the high school orchestra, directed by Professor Gustav Flechtner, played several patriotic selections. Other meetings held about the county and the speakers at each were:

J. Dean Butler, Macksburg; John Loder, Twilight; Grant B. Dimick, Mount Pleasant; N. W. Bowland, Carus; J. R. Bowland, Parkplace; Frank Mitz, Lone Elder; Rev. C. H. L. Chandler and William Hammond, Oswego; Dr. W. T. Milliken; Bolton; J. H. Cary, West Linn; C. Schuebel, Stafford; John N. Sievers, Fir Grove; Thomas A. Burke, Evergreen; Judge H. S. Anderson, South Highland and Clarkes; Brenton Veder, Eagle Creek; J. E. Calavan, Canemah and Clairmont; C. F. Romig, Lower Logan; George F. Johnson, Crescent; Jerome Howard, Redland; W. L. Arant, Shubel; B. E. Tatro, Alberta; Linn E. Jones, Maple Lane; William Stone, Union hall; W. A. Bombrake, Beaverton, and Miss Lorraine Parker, Mundorf.

CRANE MENTIONED

"Pride of West Linn" is Showered
With Goodies on Troop Train

David Hazen, writing to the Telegram from the train that carried the last of the 3d Oregon eastward, says: "Sergeant Fred Crane, formerly a popular O. A. C. student, and the hero of West Linn, is being showered with fruit and sandwiches at every town. No one knows why, but the sergeant manages to get about all the peaches and other goodies in sight. Corporal Malcolm Gilbert, of company M, is running Crane a close second. Gilbert's father owns a prune ranch near Salem, and his soldier son is already longing for the dried fruit that made boarding houses famous."

CAMPBELL UPHELD

Hawley Company Must Pay Quinn
Damages of $3550

A supreme court decision on Saturday upholds Circuit Judge Campbell of Clackamas county, in the case of W. W. Quinn vs. the Hawley Pulp & Paper company, appealed by the latter. Judge Campbell signed an order for judgment in the sum of $3550 in favor of Quinn. The supreme court sustains the verdict and calls for the payment of interest on the judgment from November 1, 1915.

Lawyers Are Divorced

Judge J. U. Campbell Friday granted a divorce to Nellie V. Lawler in her suit against Robert E. Lawler, to whom she was married at Reno, Nev., in 1906. Mrs. Lawler charged cruelty and non-support. She gets $25 a month alimony and custody of their one child, according to Judge Campbell's order.

SWINDLER OPERATES IN SELLING OF LIME

COUNTY AGENT WERNER SAYS
FARMERS ARE FLEECE BY EXCESSIVE PRICE

Excessive charges that border on swindle in connection with the sale of concentrated lime to Clackamas county farmers are reported by R. J. Werner, county agricultural agent. Mr. Werner has sent warnings to most of the farmers in the county against those who ask high prices for lime, but in spite of this, information received each day shows that more persons have permitted themselves to be swindled.

In one case, that of the Valley Lime and Fertilizer Co., of Portland, Mr. Werner made personal investigation. He found the "company" doing business in a residence on East Ninth street, Portland, where the operators were waxing wealthy from selling lime at $15 a ton in Clackamas county. The Courier has had information of several cases where farmers have paid as high as $17 a ton. Mr. Werner advises us that the proper market price for the grade of lime sold at $15 to $17 is $8 a ton. He has offered to co-operate with any farmer in the county to secure lime at the proper price.

The state lime board, criticized for its delay in getting into activity, has located its plant at Gold Hill, in southern Oregon, and machinery for the mill is on the way. Every effort is being made to rush the production of lime for farmers. Mr. Werner says, and then a relief from the swindlers will be had.

While the mill at Gold Hill is being set up, Sam Moore at Corvallis, who had much to do with the creation of a lime board, is kicking about the location and wants to know why the state should have selected the Gold Hill deposit when that near Dallas, in Polk county, would have furnished good lime at a far less cost. Mr. Moore's question probably will not be answered officially now, since the plant at Gold Hill is so nearly ready to operate.

WANTS COMMISSION TO STOP CANEMAH ROAD JOB

In place of answering the complaint filed against them by the state highway commission, J. W. and M. E. Ganong, of Canemah, Friday filed a counter suit to secure a restraining order and a permanent injunction against work being prosecuted adjacent to the Ganong property at Canemah. The highway commission used to condemn the property for highway purposes, inasmuch as the proposed road must go through that particular land or not be built. There is not room enough for a road between the railroad tracks and the river bank, and not room enough between the tracks and the property line on the other side. In the cross complaint filed Friday Mr. and Mrs. Ganong charge the highway commission with cutting trees and shrubs on their property without the formality of the condemnation it is suing for. This work started, it is said, on October 25. The Ganong property is a part of the Absalom F. Hedges donation land claim in what is known as Stringtown.

Four Are Kelo Heirs

W. E. Kelo, son of John R. Kelo, who died October 21, was Tuesday appointed administrator of his father's estate upon petition of another son, Muri Kelo. The petition names the widow and three sons as heirs. The whereabouts of O. S. Kelo, the third son, is unknown to the petitioners. The estate is valued at $1143. John R. Kelo was formerly a prominent Milwaukie citizen, where he was justice of the peace for a number of years.

Sheep Sent East

The 20,000 sheep pastured around Molalla by Edward Mayes, are being shipped to eastern Oregon ranges and are going through Oregon City in trainload lots over the Willamette Valley Southern. The flocks will be centered on eastern Oregon ranges for the winter. Mr. Mayes is reported to have sold most of his lambs and shipped them to Chicago at about $10 an animal.

Red Cross Benefit Delayed

The Red Cross benefit social which was to have been held on Thursday evening by the Bethel Sunday school at Redlands has been postponed until Saturday evening. Great plans for a splendid entertainment have been made by those in charge, who say their program will be better because of the change in date.

Molalla Red Cross Active

On Friday a Red Cross benefit meeting will be held at the Cedar Falls school house, eight miles south of Molalla. Gordon J. Taylor, chairman of the local chapter, will speak on the work of the Red Cross, and Rev. F. W. Snyder, pastor of the Methodist church here, will speak on the work of the Y. M. C. A. at the front.

LIBERTY LOAN IS OVERSUBSCRIBED

LOYAL MASS IN CLACKAMAS
PUTS UP $337,400 TO WAGE NATION'S WAR

SANDY MAKES FINE RECORD

State Goes Over Quota by More
Than Seven Millions. Oregon
City Gives $249,650

Will the gentleman who said that Clackamas county is not a hotbed of patriotism please rise? Face the fact of your mistake, sir, for this county has loaned to the United States government about $90 for every man and woman of census age through the purchase of Liberty loan bonds. And Oregon City is credited with the sale of approximately three-fourths of the county's quota.

Clackamas county's quota was $300,000 and $337,400 was loaned by this county, of which $249,650 was subscribed in Oregon City alone. A loyal mass of citizens, Germans, friends and countrymen, awakened on Sunday morning to find what had been a $50,000 shortage in subscriptions to the Liberty loan changed, almost overnight, to an oversubscription of nearly $40,000, and the county has itself officially credited with raising 112 per cent of its quota, or 12 per cent more than the government asked this county to loan. The oversubscription is credited to Oregon City, although the county outside subscribed about $3,000 more than the $85,000 required outside the county seat.

It is presumed that the few official statements yet to be added to the quota of the state of Oregon will make no material difference, and the state is credited with having oversubscribed its $18,023,000 quota by $7,326,650, making a total subscription for the state of $25,350,450. These figures will be slightly increased when all official statements are in at headquarters.

Approximately final reports from the banking houses of Clackamas county show that the First National bank of Oregon City leads all other bond selling agencies in the county with a report of sales amounting to $120,750, a large part of which indicates the subscription of railroad and mill companies. Other totals reported by banks in the county are: Bank of Oregon City, $87,050; Bank of Commerce, Oregon City, $41,850; Farmers' Bank, Wilsonville, $14,650; First National, Canby, $14,000; Canby State bank, $12,000; Estacada State bank, $15,500; Molalla State bank, $14,400; Clackamas county bank, Sandy, $13,200; Milwaukie State bank, $7,500.

A feature of this report is the showing made at Sandy, where, with a population of less than 500 persons, a total of $13,200 is reported by the one bank. And doubtless other Sandy bond buyers are credited to county seat or Portland banks. Sandy's quota to be raised was $7500. The little town has at least doubled its quota, whereas Milwaukie, with a population of about 1000 persons has subscribed only $7500, or 32 per cent of its quota of $23,000. The figures of Milwaukie's report, however, do not do justice to that city, inasmuch as a great deal of Milwaukie's money is held by and spent through Portland banks, with the result that they get a large share of the glory for what Milwaukie's citizens have done. Wilsonville, through the Farmers' bank, also has a splendid report to make, having sold $14,650 worth of bonds. Much of the credit for these highly favorable reports must, in justice, be given to the Live Wires of Oregon City, who conducted a very effective campaign on behalf of the bond issue last Wednesday.

All agencies combined to make the sale of Liberty bonds in this county climb above the quota required and to place the county among those to whom great credit is due for swelling the state's total far beyond the quota. Clackamas county oversubscribed the first and second Liberty loans and it will oversubscribe the third and all the others to come.

Sues Mill for $250

In an action brought before Justice of the Peace John N. Sievers Tuesday, Everett Cross seeks to recover from the Crown-Willamette Paper company $250 as damages for an injury he suffered some time ago when he fell through a floor in one of the company's mills here.

LADS OVERSEAS GET RED CROSS PARCELS

GOOD WOMEN OF COUNTY SEND FINE CHRISTMAS BOXES TO TRENCHES. MANY AID.

Many youthful hearts across the waters are to be cheered this Christmas by the good heartedness of Clackamas county's Red Cross workers, who have just completed the preparation of 200 individual gift boxes for shipment to the front. Each box will carry into the trenches a message reading: "Oregon City, Oregon, Red Cross wishes a merry Christmas to our boys in France."

The Christmas boxes, pretty with holiday colors, contain two tins of tobacco, pipe and cleaners, chewing gum, two bandana handkerchiefs, writing pad, package of envelopes, lead pencil, fruit cake, chocolate fudge, raisins, prunes, salted nuts and one dish towel. Thus the boxes have been made to carry both necessities and luxuries. The estimated cost of the 200 boxes is $400 and their cost was paid for by generous contributions on the part of people in many sections of the county, and many patriotic folk aided the society in its great work. Canby Red Cross workers donated most of the prunes used in the "good cheer" parcels, as well as money; fruit cake and candy was supplied by the Derthick club of Oregon City; the Girls' Honor Guard donated salted nuts and cash; Gladstone women sent in money and raisins and other supplies, together with money contributions were sent to headquarters by Beaver Creek, Barlow, Aurora, Mount Pleasant, Clatskanie, Logan and Twilight. The Boy Scouts and the Honor Guard assisted nobly in collecting contributions and supplies for the boxes.

Contribution boxes in several stores in the city netted the Red Cross $10.81 for this work; C. C. Louche of Newberg sent $5 and Richard Petzold gave a $25 check. Crown-Willamette mill employees gave $38.25, all of which was in addition to the $30 collected on the streets Saturday by the Boy Scouts and Honor Guard, and the $12.25 collected by A. H. Harvey of Twilight. Mrs. R. L. Badger, the "angel mother" of many a homesome, homesick chap in camp and trench, showed again the goodness of her heart by sending a large box of edibles and supplies for the lads in French hospitals.

The committee which had charge of the Christmas box plans of the Red Cross society comprised Mrs. L. L. Pickens, Mrs. Alice B. Smith, Mrs. C. G. Miller, Mrs. James Cary and A. R. Jacobs. Another group of patriots worked throughout the day Wednesday in packing for shipment the cases which will carry good will to America's fighters abroad. Among those who helped at this were the members of the committee named Mrs. B. T. McBain, Mrs. John W. Loder, Mrs. A. C. Howland, Mrs. W. A. Dimick, Mrs. L. E. Jones, Mrs. Fred Smith, Mrs. H. E. Straight, Mrs. John Scott, Fred Smith, J. Meyer and others.

In all, Wednesday was a day of activity on the part of this busy body of workers and before the tire and sometimes heart sick boys overseas have had a chance to return their thanks to the women. Oregon City showers its praises up on them for their fine efforts and wonderful patriotic accomplishments.

OREGON CITY WINS GAME FROM VANCOUVER HIGH

The Oregon City high school football team Friday added another to its early season victories when it defeated the Vancouver high school eleven at Canemah field in one of the best games the local team has played in years. Wallace Mass was the particular star for the home team yesterday and a close contender for honors was Fauley. Honing, of the Vancouver team, played a good game for the visitors. Mass, of Oregon City, is credited with both scores made by the Oregon City team. Following the game, which, owing to the strikes here, was witnessed by close to 1000 people, the Vancouver team and rooters were guests at a luncheon at the high school building, and the noise of cheering echoed in the city until a late hour in the evening. Oregon City plays a return game with Vancouver on the latter's field tomorrow afternoon.

WAGES ARE RAISED

P. R. L. & P. Interurban Men Get
Eight Hour Basic Day
An advance in wages will be granted the interurban line employees of the Portland Railway, Light & Power Co., including the entire force on the Oregon City line. The eight-hour basic day will apply to the interurban lines as well as to the city lines. The new scale for the interurban employees is 41 1/2 cents for first year, 43 1/2 cents for second year, and after second year 45 1/2 cents an hour. The advance amounts to 11 cents an hour. There are 140 employees benefitted by the new scale.

STRIKE AFFECTS BIG PAPER MILLS

ALL DEPARTMENTS IDLE AND
1400 MEN OUT OF WORK
SINCE THURSDAY

NO SETTLEMENT APPARENT

Strikebreakers Hissed and Hooted.
Union Official Talks. Want Increased Wages.

With practically the entire force of both the Crown-Willamette and Hawley Pulp & Paper company's big mills here out on strike and the plants closed down, the wheels of industry are practically paralyzed. The strike, threatened, but apparently settled on Wednesday evening, broke out afresh on Thursday evening in the Crown-Willamette mills and early Friday morning in the Hawley mills, where every workman except the office force walked out. About 1400 men are affected by the strike.

When the night shift was due to go on at 4 o'clock to work to 12, Thursday, the strike order was published and the new shift did not report at the Crown-Willamette mills. The reason for the strike is said to be the mill company's absolute refusal to grant a wage increase of 25 cents a day and time and a half for overtime and for Sunday work, and the refusal to arbitrate the questions involved. Some time ago the mill company refused to consider union demands for the adoption of closed shop rules in the mill.

George J. Schneider, international president of paper mill unions had been in conference with Manager Lewthwaite of the mills and, in the absence of word from the company's head office at San Francisco, or definite word from the state board of conciliation, was withholding the strike order until Thursday evening. Between 500 and 600 men walked out early Friday morning at the Hawley Pulp & Paper company's big mill in sympathy with strikers who left work at Crown-Willamette mills Thursday night.

The Hawley mills had not been affected by the strike preparations, but when the Crown-Willamette mills sent an order to the Hawley mills to be filled Thursday night, workmen at the latter mill said they would strike as soon as their labors brought them to the Crown-Willamette order. When they were told to work on the order every man in the mill stopped work and walked out.

Scores of strikers went to Portland and secured work at the shipyards and other places. In the meantime no progress has been made locally toward a settlement of the trouble that has called out about 1400 men in the two large plants. Strikers are said to offset the worries of local business men, some of whom have wondered about extending credit, by preparing plans for a union co-operative store, although no public action toward its establishment has been made.

It is reported that the Crown-Willamette company is prepared for an indefinite period of striking, and has its affairs so arranged that little hardship will result to the company. The Hawley mills, however, not anticipating the strike, are anxious to get the machinery going again. The unions have dropped that feature of their demand which held for closed shop principles in Oregon City, since this was refused by the mill managers some time ago, and will devote themselves to assuring the wage increase.

Plans of the Hawley company, to start at least one paper machine have been thwarted because men refused to return to work even when offered pay for the time they had been idle.

In the meantime more than 100 men working at the Crown-Willamette mills are suffering the taunts of strikers from both mills. When the shift comes off at 4:30 in the afternoon and when it goes to work in the morning the Oregon City end of the suspension bridge is crowded with several hundred strikers who hiss and hoot the men who, in the face of the strike, continue their work. Each morning resident manager McBain uses his automobile to carry workmen from this end of the bridge and several groups of men operate their own cars in both directions to carry workmen who do not care to linger in the vicinity of the groups of strikers. Each evening the Oregon City end of the bridge holds several hundred strikers acting as a reception committee to the men who failed to join in the strike at the Crown-Willamette plants.

Willard P. Hawley Jr., said that the mill would have to turn out the Crown-Willamette order when operations are resumed, because, to not execute the order would be a practical grant of the closed shop demands. Whenever the mills resume, (Continued on Page 8)

FUND FOR Y. M. C. A. OBJECTIVE OF DRIVE

COMMITTEES WILL COLLECT
$4000 FROM CLACKAMAS
COUNTY FOR SOLDIERS

The Clackamas county drive for the war fund campaign of the army Y. M. C. A., will start from Oregon City and Estacada on November 11 and committees in charge will have one rushing week to collect $4000 as this county's share of a $35,000,000 fund to aid the great work the Y. M. C. A. is doing for the boys in the trenches and in American training camps.

A meeting of citizens held at the Commercial club last evening outlined plans for the campaign that it is hoped to carry to every corner of the county in the short time allowed. Contributions to be asked will be small, but they must be prompt, it was decided, and general from all people. The campaign for the western sections of the county will be handled from Oregon City, while eastern Clackamas headquarters will be in charge of separate committees at Estacada.

For this section the meeting last night selected A. C. Howland as general chairman and Mr. Howland has announced the appointment of the following assistants: P. J. Houlton, secretary; Percy Caulfield, treasurer; E. C. Brownlee, publicity; J. W. Loder and C. H. Dye, committeemen. The Estacada headquarters will manage its campaign along similar lines, it is expected.

What the Y. M. C. A. is doing for American soldiers is known especially to those who have boys at the front. Hardly a letter is written from camp or trench that is not on Y. M. C. A. stationery, and few letters fail to mention the great work that is being carried on. The work of helping the soldiers themselves and is considered one of the first forms of patriotic expression. One soldier at the front says the Y. M. C. A. dugout is the "last evidence that anybody cares." Wherever the American troops gather, and among French, Russian and Italian soldiers and prisoner-of-war camps, the red triangle of the Y. M. C. A. goes to help safeguard the home ideals. For one of the gravest dangers of this war is that our boys may not keep true to these home ideals. Hundreds of warm, cheerful lads have been built at the front. They are centers of friendliness where soldiers find pleasant social recreation and relief from hard, cold camp life.

General Pershing says: "The Y. M. C. A. gives the soldiers opportunity of improving himself physically, mentally, morally. Strong muscles, clear brains, high ideals in the soldier increase the fighting efficiency."

PETITIONS TO DEPOSE AGENT ARE CIRCULATED

A. J. Lewis of Maple Lane and E. E. Kellogg of Mount Pleasant are circulating petitions against the retention of an agricultural agent in the county. It appears to the county the county agent plan is merely on trial in Clackamas county and since the matter will be put before the voters at the next election for final decision.

The government is paying the burden of the cost of keeping an agent in this county until the voters can express themselves and the court prepare to meet the costs. Just at this time the agent is doubly necessary, it is pointed out, for the work he can do toward helping the state and nation in the production and conservation of food stuffs. In the work he has done already for Clackamas county, through cooperative efforts with enterprising farmers the agent has practically paid the county back for any expense he has incurred. It is only in a spirit of fairness to the county agent plan, to the county court and to the farmers themselves that The Courier suggests a full and impartial trial for the county agent before he or the court is embarrassed through the presentation of such petitions as are being circulated.

W. P. HAWLEY FATHER

Little Lady Has Block of New Liberty Bonds as Present

Just as he was in the midst of strike troubles as resident manager of the Hawley Pulp & Paper company, Willard P. Hawley Jr., had to stop on Tuesday to name the nine-pound daughter, born to Mrs. Hawley on that day. The daughter has been named Eva Adele in honor of her grandmother, Mrs. W. P. Hawley, Sr. W. P. Hawley Sr., grandfather of the little lass, has placed a block of Liberty bonds to the credit of Eva Adele.

Clackamas county farmers who are progressive, have saved their money for future operations by buying Liberty bonds and storing them in the safe deposit vault for the winter.

THE ESKIMOS OF THE LOWER YUKON

MR. BROWN WRITES OF INDIANS AND THEIR HIGH-CHEEKED, STUPID PERSONS

NERVY YOUTH RIDES A KYAK

Passengers on Trip Crowd Barges and Enjoy the Free Entertainment Offered

When the river trip is finished I will endeavor to give you some interesting stories of Indian life, mining, the Eskimos, dog mushing, winter life, etc., but I don't like to leave myself in a river town in the interior so stay with me down the river.

The Sarah left Tanana in the night, and early the next morning I went on deck. And what a sight. Our boat was pushing eight barges, every one of them almost as large as the steamer—one on each side and six in front. There were simply acres of boats, all tied together, and this bunch must be piloted down the crooked stream and steered clear of the bars. And I would remark here that a pilot on the Yukon is entitled to a nervous breakdown any time he wants it. It was a revelation to me how they could know every channel in that river for a thousand mile run. Here they will hug the bank so close one could almost jump ashore, then they steer to the middle of the river for a time, cross to the opposite side, and come back. Once in a while there will be a sign on the river bank that warns them of some particularly dangerous bar or submerged rock, but the most of the way the route is in the pilot's head and apparently every turn of the river looks just like the other one.

Then the heavy summer rains make a torrent of the big Yukon, which grows wider every day as you descend. Big and little streams pour into it all along its course, until it becomes the Mississippi of the north land. Where last week there was an open channel this week there may be a bar. In the uncertain places natives stood on the head barge with sounding poles, measuring the depth every two or three minutes, which they called out to a deck hand on the roof of the scow, and he made signals to the pilot.

Three and a half days for the down passage with this bunch of boats. I guessed no—and I was a good guesser.

We made short stops at the several mining towns, and everywhere was the same story—mines playing out, people going out, no new strikes. We reached Circle in the morning—the usual little bunch of log houses; a store or two and the saloons. The whole population came down to see the boat in and out, and I only saw two white women. I did not see a white child in the town. The miners laid in a supply of bottled goods, the whistle blew, the dogs howled and on we went.

Ruby was quite a town in the way of buildings, and they were all of new logs. It was a new mining town, four or five years old, but the claims were fast being worked out, the people were getting out and the town was struck with rust.

At the junction of the Koyukuk several passengers came aboard from the Beetles country, the most northerly mining district in Alaska. This is yet a producing district, and a real wild one—a locality where they tow up two-loads of booze to one of grub, and of which I will have more to write in further articles. Holy Cross is a mission, the oldest in Alaska, and has been there for nearly 50 years. The Catholics have a grant of the land, I was told, and they will not permit saloons, gambling houses or outsiders to locate, in fact it was necessary to anchor an abandoned steamer to the shore to be used for hotel purposes. I was told the mission had done a wonderful work for the good of the natives.

Miles below Holy Cross there was a Russian mission, at which the boat did not stop. Evidently they had plenty of grub for the winter and didn't receive any mail. The boat ran close to the bank and we had a splendid view of the big Greek church, a magnificent structure in this remote place. And it looked so out of place in these surroundings. Around it was scattered the Indian village, but we did not see a sign of life in the place. Doubtless all the inhabitants were out rustling preparations for the long winter, which would soon set in.

Sitting on the deck one afternoon afar off on the land ahead I saw a cluster of white dots. I was curious to know what they were, and I was soon enlightened. It was a new strike—Willow Creek—and a few miles further down was Marshall, its supply town. The white dots were tents.

Gold was struck in Willow Creek about two years ago; the usual stampede followed, and the whole hillside was staked. As the boat
