COURIER'S XMAS BARGAIN OFFER PROVES POPULAR

When The Courier offered a Christmas present to new subscribers and to old friends who renew their subscriptions, it anticipated a large return. But the actual result has so far overshadowed our expectations that we have been forced to prepare a large number of merchandise orders in addition to those we had planned for.

The response to this offer was almost instant. Before the last issue of The Courier was thoroughly distributed we started passing out merchandise orders on the merchants of Oregon City, and entering subscriptions to The Courier and the Oregon Farmer.

The Courier's plan to remember new and old subscribers at this Christmas season is this: Pay your $1.00, silver, paper, check, draft, money order—or whatever form your money is in—and we will give you a MERCHANDISE CERTIFICATE worth a full 25 cents in any store in the city; one full year's subscription to THE OREGON FARMER. What more could you ask?

Remember, this offer cannot be duplicated anywhere in the country with a paper selling at $1.00 a year. And it cannot be duplicated with The Courier after December 25. Get in early if you want to take advantage of The Courier's Christmas bargain offer.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Catarrh being greatly influenced by constitutional conditions requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine is taken internally and acts thru the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, saving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in the curative powers of Hall's Catarrh Medicine that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by all Druggists, etc.

M. J. BROWN STORY

And having guessed, they stake and follow that guess to bedrock, and this is what they have to do to verify that guess.

The first thing is to prepare for winter. A warm cabin must be erected out of logs, so about the first thing is to hike back to the river supply town for more grub and necessary tools.

The cabin built, then wood must be cut for the long winter, fish must be caught before the fish go down and before the streams freeze solid, and game must be shot, if there is any in that locality. And above all there must be enough grub packed in to last during the long and terrible winter.

And by the time these preparations are made the brief summer is over, winter has come down and the men commence their shafts through the many feet of solidly-frozen ground to bed rock, and that may be twenty or eighty feet.

And here let me explain a bit. I have a letter here from a New York newspaper asking me what kind of dope I am trying to put over in statements that the ground of Alaska freezes to a depth of 80 feet. The editor says it is impossible for frost to penetrate to this depth, no matter how low the temperature.

Nevertheless, ground in Alaska IS frozen to this depth, millions of acres of it, and the best explanation I can find is that in the ages past (a million years is but the batting of an eye in the making of Alaska) glacial and volcanic action has gradually covered the already frozen ground time and again, the covering in its turn freezing.

But back to the prospectors. When the surface is solidly frozen and no surface water can interfere, they start the shaft, usually two or three at different points on the water course.

They don't pick or blast the hole, they thaw it, build a big fire over it day after day, and slowly but surely MELT a hole, about four feet across, down through the ground to bedrock.

This thawing is a very slow process. Two fires are used in each hole in each 24 hours, and twice in 24 hours the thawed dirt is shoveled out. From one to two feet can be thawed in a day, depending on whether the soil is muck or gravel. The wood for the fires has to be cut as it is used.

As the hole deepens a bucket and windlass is supplied. The man at the bottom shovels in the dirt and the man on top hoists it, and he on the surface has by far the hardest job, for he must stand the worst blizzards that blow anywhere on the American continent.

If the prospectors have the necessary capital a boiler is used in place of the fires and the thawing is done by steam points. This is a much faster process. But I am writing of the life of the ordinary prospector, who has more of sand than money.

And so on, day after day these men toil, working often from 16 to 18 hours in thawing the two or more shafts, cutting the necessary wood and hauling out the dirt with a windlass and bucket. The bucket tapers wide at the top so it can be easily dumped.

As the hole goes down, they pan and estimate and one of these old "sour doughs" can in a few minutes' mental calculation determine just how rich the ground is to the running foot, a problem that would take considerable figuring for a man fresh with the figures.

The big guess is, as the shaft deepens, whether the condition of the bed rock is such that it has stopped the descent of the gold, or whether it is smooth and hard and the yellow flakes have gone on down—somewhere in Alaska.

And when the bottom is struck the bed rock or floor through which the gold cannot penetrate, then in a short time the hopes of weeks are fulfilled or blasted. There on the bed rock may be seams from which a pan of dirt may be almost half gold, or it may be as free from any flakes as is John D. Rockefeller's head of any sign of hair.

It is a great, fascinating gamble. If the lead struck, then it is but a question of following it with tunnels, and every bucket of dirt means a lot of very fast money. Fortunes are often made in a month. Then again the dirt may be just average, where good wages may be made by staying with the streak.

The horizontal shafts are thawed in the same way, by building fires and thawing ahead. When the bed rock is near enough to the surface open cuts are made in place of the underground tunnels, and this is far easier.

If a strike is made, about the first thing that is done is to beat it for the nearest river town and spread the news. Usually a few close friends are tipped off before the stampede is started. It is a peculiar phase of mining life that the minute a prospector makes a strike he jumps to civilization and proclaims it. He wants company, a camp, the excitement of a stampede and above all, a store where he can buy stuff and a saloon where he can irrigate his insides. Men who have worked for years in the solitude of prospecting simply go berserk when they at last make a strike, and then when tanked up with "kick" booze, which is about the first thing they do, they literally raise hell and scatter their first gold dust like sand.

And no man is so thoroughly self-satisfied and supremely happy as a "sour dough" back from a "strike," displaying his dust and nuggets and telling the boys to beat it out and stake.

And how they do stampede. A pack of wolves chasing a wounded caribou could not beat them for lust. They pour in and stake their 20 acres, and like crazy men they work their heads off and their hearts out to get down to the pay streak.

And a late comer, perhaps a "cheechako" (tenderfoot) who never panned an ounce of gold in his life, and who takes what is left, claims a veteran would not look at or consider doing enough assessment work on to hold for speculation, this tenderfoot may, and is liable to, strike the richest dirt in the whole camp.

All rules of the mining game are off in Alaska gold hunting. Everything is chance. "Gold is where you find it." I saw a rich strike made by a "fool cheechako" thawing two feet farther in an abandoned hole.

Next week I am going to tell you more about mining life—going to give you the little "inside stuff" not often written of, the expedients, the trail tricks, the hardships that go with the hunt for gold in the North Land.

MILLER LANDS IN JAIL

Portland Arrested Sunday Claims He Was Robbed by Companions

R. S. Miller, who emigrated to Clackamas county from Portland on Sunday with a full load of hard liquor aboard, ran afoul the law at Gladstone in the person of Thomas A. Burke, deputy district attorney, and spent Sunday night in the peaceful environs of the city jail, keeping company with several other gentlemen of the highways and byways.

Miller appeared at the home of H. E. Cross on Sunday, uncertain whether he was going or coming, and frightened one of the daughters of the household into mild screams. Enter Mr. Burke and exit Mr. Miller. Between hiccoughs Miller told that he had been robbed by companions with whom he had partaken of the spirits of fire. He was penniless when he arrived, that is certain, and officers incline to the opinion that his drunken tale is straight. But, alas and alack, Mr. Burke could do nothing. Miller was directed on his way to Portland Monday morning.

ELKS HAVE SERVICE

United States District Attorney Reames Addressed Lodgement

The program for the annual memorial service at the Elks' lodge here on Sunday afternoon featured the address of Clarence L. Reames, United States district attorney. Exalted Ruler Grant B. Dimick presided, and Chaplain J. C. Sawyer delivered the invocation and benediction. "The Long Day Closes" and "The Lost Chord" were rendered by Hartbridge Whipp's male quartet, of which Thomas A. Burke, of the Oregon City lodge, is a member. At the services 21 departed brothers were honored in the memories of their fellows. A committee, including District Attorney Gilbert L. Hedges, O. D. Eby and John F. Risley had charge of the memorial services.

WAR COST 41 MILLIONS

Ordinary Revenue and War Taxes Will Provide One-Quarter

America's problems for two years of the war are told in figures as follows: Expenditures for all purposes (approximate fiscal years 1917-18), $21,000,000,000.

Expenditures for all purposes, fiscal year 1918-19 (estimated), $20,000,000,000.

Total expenditures for all purposes first two years of war, $41,000,000,000.

Daily expenditures to carry on war, $3,480,000.

Amount expected to be raised by ordinary revenue and war taxes, $10,000,000,000.

Bonds and other forms of loans to meet deficit in two years, $31,000,000,000.

Loans to allies in two years (estimated), $13,000,000,000.

Standing army at end of 1918, 900,000.

Army in France at end of 1918, 1,000,000.

COMMISSION SUES

Would Condemn Highway Right-of-Way in Fish Land Claim

The state highway commission Saturday brought suit against Kate and Barney O'Neill and Albin T. and Anna Erickson for the purpose of forcibly establishing a right-of-way through the Walter Fish donation land claim, township 3 south, range 1 east, by condemnation. The right-of-way desired is to be a part of the Pacific highway between Oregon City and New Era and is the second suit brought in connection with the same road work by the commission. The first was for the condemnation of a right-of-way through the Absalom Hedges donation land claim, known as the Ganong place at Canemah.

AUTO LAW IMPERATIVE

Owners Must Have New License January 1 or Lay Up Car

Secretary Olcott has issued a statement relative to motor vehicle licenses which says:

"Of the nearly 49,000 motor vehicles registered in Oregon during the present year, applications for 1918 licenses have thus far been filed in the automobile department of the secretary of state's office for only 5200 of that number.

"In view of the fact that the motor vehicle law requires the owners to secure licenses before they can drive their cars, a congestion of the work of issuing the licenses is likely to occur unless those owners who desire to drive their cars without interruption make application at an early date for their 1918 licenses."

Poultry Best Chance

Poultry must be produced next year in places where it has not been produced before, and everywhere that poultry has been produced production must be increased. It is necessary that people in the country and in the towns answer alike to this call. Farms and backyards must both do their bit, for the doubling of our poultry production next year is an indispensable item in the nation's food production program—a program which must be carried out if we are to win the war.

The meat supplies available for European use are short. Meat must be supplied if the war is won—by the forces who fight for freedom. The war will be won if we fail in food production—but not won by us. We must understand what will happen if we do not provide the enormous quantities of foodstuffs that the allies cannot produce for themselves.

Are we going to feed our army on chickens and eggs? Of course not. But by greatly increasing our production of chickens and eggs, and by eating those chickens and eggs ourselves we will, naturally, eat that much less beef and pork. In turn, that beef and pork can be sent to Europe.

The United States department of agriculture calls upon the country to double poultry production next year. That can be done if the farms will keep an average of 100 hens instead of an average of 40 hens, as at present, and if every family in town will keep enough hens in the backyard to produce all the eggs used by that family—or two hens to each person.

Good To Have in the House

Coughs, colds, croup and lagrippe are prevalent. Colds promptly checked mean saving of time, money and health. Pneumonia and other serious illness may follow a neglected cold. T. F. Lynch, 100 Spring Ave., DuBois, Pa., writes: "For many years we have kept Foley's Honey and Tar in the house and it has saved many dollars in doctors' bills. It is fine for colds." A child's health is too precious to risk giving imitations or substitutes; insist on Foley's—Jones Drug Co.

JAMES STARTS FIRE

Intoxicated Man Reposes First on Burning Box, Then in Jail

Elsworth James, fired with spirits of unknown origin, started a mysterious fire in a box of shavings in the carpenter shop of the Hawley mill on Saturday and won for himself a bed for the night in the city jail. James was not bothered by the fire and when mill employees put out the blaze he was still reposing contentedly upon the burning box. Night Officer Burke lodged the man in jail. He is a resident of Mount Pleasant, an addition to Oregon City.

No other paper in Clackamas county publishes as much Clackamas county news as The Courier.
