IS OURS A NATION OF SLACKERS WRITER ASKS

Boston, Mass.

To The Courier:

The necessity for patriotic economy will be evident if we think of finance in terms of labor instead of in dollars. We have natural resources and we have capital invested in the tools of production, but even with these facilities our productive capacity is limited by the supply of labor. By labor we mean the personal service, whether of brain or of brawn, of the forty million of us who are engaged in gainful occupation.

To carry on the war we shall spend at least twelve billion dollars per year, or thirty-three million dollars per day. This is as much as Great Britain is spending and fifty per cent more than Germany is spending, and the figures are so huge that few of us appreciate what they really mean.

Europe is already so deeply in debt that she may never be able to pay, and we are on the road to the same condition. Balance of trade statistics indicate that we have made an extra profit from foreign business since 1914 of five billion dollars, or about two billion dollars per year. The effect of this in enriching the country is suggestive of the result of three years of impoverishment at the rate of eight billion dollars.

Our normal annual savings are about four billion dollars, and not only will our war expenditure absorb all of these savings, but we must find eight billion dollars in addition. During the past three years our present allies have obtained much assistance from us, but as there is no country to whom we can turn we must carry our burden alone.

Our savings go into public and private improvements, including the extension of business enterprises. These savings will not be available for war until we stop federal, municipal and private improvements; until we forbid all issue of securities except under federal license, following the example whereby England reduced the issue of industrial securities from $468,000,000 in the first half of 1914, to $11,000,000 in the same period of 1917.

The danger of a food famine has been brought home to us and we are making a real effort to reduce consumption though our efforts to increase production are being seriously handicapped by the high price of labor.

Immediately after war was declared president warned the country that everyone should produce more and consume less. The idea that business was to be suddenly reduced by a wave of economy was a shock to business men and the cry "business as usual" was spread over the country and caused the president's appeal to be forgotten. Not only are people spending as usual, but many conscientiously believe it their duty so to do.

Every dollar spent means the consumption of labor. We shall not be far wrong if we say that every four dollars spent, consumes a day's labor, and that every twelve hundred dollars spent consumes a year's labor. A war expenditure of twelve billion dollars will consume the labor of ten million people; twenty-five per cent of our total labor supply. This added demand comes during the greatest labor famine in our history, which has increased commodity prices eighty-five per cent since 1914.

We have reached a point where the increasing demand reduces the supply, and we are facing further rise in commodity prices, perhaps to exceed present conditions in England, where prices are up one hundred and twenty per cent.

The most effective remedy is to decrease consumption, and it is imperative that every one should make a drastic reduction in personal expenditures. The example must be set by the rich, but every man, woman and child must be drawn into the movement until patriotic economy becomes the greatest fact the country has ever known.

Our young men who try to avoid military service are "slackers." Every one of us who will not economize to help the war is a "slacker." Who will fail to spend less when he realizes that every four dollars saved is a day's labor contributed to the war? It is not a question whether your income justifies an expenditure, but whether the country can afford to let you spend.

Even to prevent hardship we have no right to spend to keep people in their usual employment, for only by a process of readjustment can we obtain the labor necessary for the war. Already the government is resorting to price fixing and other dangerous experiments, because we can no longer submit to the law of supply and demand. We cannot increase supply, but we can so reduce demand that the available supply shall meet our needs and so keep prices within bounds.

With two million men in cantonments or in tents there are houses enough for the rest of us. We can reduce the famine in wool and cotton by wearing our old clothes. We can stop the purchase of automobiles, so that the factories and their operatives may produce motor trucks, air craft and munitions. We can use the automobiles we now have less freely and save gasoline. We can reduce the number of our servants and let our wives and daughters do more of the work. We can do away with the wastefulness of charity entertainments if we go less to the theatre and give the money to the needy.

The real horrors in Europe are not on the firing line, but amongst the civil population, who are pinched for the necessities of life and in many cases dying of starvation. If each one of us is not willing to make sacrifices for the war, Germany was right when she characterized us as "Nation of Slackers."—Everett Moras.

COUNTY IS COMMENDED FOR WORK IN SCHOOLS

"For a good many years the average country school in America has been attempting to teach children the rules of hygiene and sanitation through lessons from textbooks, and too frequently it has, at the same time, been setting a very bad example through violating these rules itself," says Superintendent Churchill in his new school directory, just issued. "It has taught the value of cleanliness and has required the children to work in an unclean schoolhouse whose floor, walls and furniture were covered with dirt and dust. It has taught the value of fresh air and has kept the children confined in foul air that has been breathed over and over again until it reeked with poisonous gases. It has emphasized the care of the eyes and has compelled the children to work in cross lights and sometimes to sit facing the windows. It has taught the duty of personal cleanliness and righteousness and has allowed innocent children to visit filthy toilets, whose walls were covered with obscenity. It has taught those valuable lessons from textbooks, but much of the good has been discounted, if not wholly destroyed, through the more impressive lessons of bad example."

In summing up the benefits of standardizing the rural schools Mr. Churchill says:

"In reporting the results of standardizing country schools, the County Superintendent of Clackamas county states that they have induced 40 districts to meet the 13 requirements for standard schools, and many more have met nearly all the requirements, while all the rest have met some of them."

STATE MAY GET NEW ROAD

Wemme Toll Route Is Part of Important Loop

George W. Joseph, attorney of Portland, was at Salem last week visiting state officials, and while his mission was not announced, it is understood that he is getting ready to address a letter to the state highway commission offering to turn over to the state the E. Henry Wemme toll road on the Mount Hood road.

This road runs from Rhododendron to Government camp and then on over the old Barlow trail. It is a portion of the proposed Mount Hood loop, and the presentation of the road to the state, if accepted by the state highway commission, probably would preface an early completion of the long-desired Mount Hood loop.

The toll road was left by Mr. Wemme to Mr. Joseph. Some time since Senator Joseph tendered the road to the federal government, but it was never accepted.

Its acceptance by the state would free it from the toll burden which is now imposed on tourists going over the road and would throw its maintenance onto the state. While Senator Joseph has not stated what conditions would be exacted in connection with turning over the road, it is probable that it will be done with the understanding that he Mount Hood loop be completed and that the state maintain the road. The proposed road will also be constructed in connection with the forest reserve as a forest road, according to the understanding, and the forestry service now has the matter in hand.

QUESTIONNAIRES TO COME

Registrants Are Asked to Respond Promptly on Receipt of Paper

If you are a registrant, if your name is on the draft list, watch out for the questionnaire to be mailed starting December 15 and be quick to respond to it.

This is the advice being given registrants by County Clerk Harrington. Miss Harrington said Saturday that mailing of questionnaires will commence the middle of this month, when they will be sent to 5 per cent of registered men within jurisdiction of local boards. An additional 5 per cent will be addressed in the same way on each following day for 20 days, until the entire 100 per cent of registrants have received their blanks.

FRIARS' CLUB BLAZES

J. Wilbur's Favorite Haunt Is Most Consumed by Night Fire

Shades of Julius Wilbur! The Friars' club breaks into print again. Re-christened "Riverside Park," and devoted, it is said, to the harmless pursuit of dancing, the old Friars' club broke into flame on Monday night and for a time the crime sodden old whole was threatened with total destruction. An engine company from Sellwood and the Milwaukie volunteer fire department got the blaze under control before much damage was done. The fire is said to have started between the floors of the main building, and firemen had considerable trouble before they located the source. The building was practically vacant and little damage resulted.

What a merry conflagration there would have been, though, if the blaze had eaten into the past of the club, uncovered the many coats of paint, the many white washings, that have scarcely hidden the iniquity that has had quarter between those walls.

Mrs. Tellefson Sues

Betsy Tellefson last week brought action against David M. Bridenstine in which she charges violation of a rental agreement and seeks to recover $170 alleged to be due as rent. A judgment order in favor of Carl Barth and against F. C. Mortenson was signed Tuesday by Judge Campbell calling for the payment of $525.69.
